Stop-Gap Teachers Bill Set

TEACHERS OUT IN ALBERNI

PORT ALBERNI — Half the 425 teachers in Alberni School District booked off sick today, closing all the district's 26 schools.

The book-offs are to protest failure of the Alberni school board to begin local bargaining of the teachers' 1975 contract.

"We want to bargain in Port Alberni and nowhere else," said Alberni Teachers' Association president Winston Joseph today.

Region To Share Bus Costs

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

The Capital Regional District will have to begin paying its share of transit costs in 1975, Municipal Affairs Minister James Lorimer said Tuesday.

Lorimer will propose the local municipalities pay one-half the operating losses for bus services in the area, up to an amount equivalent to what two mills could raise.

B.C. will continue to pay the full capital costs of Greater Victoria's transit service and will pay the other half of the operating losses.

Victoria and Vancouver have been "snarled" until now, he said in an interview, and it is time the urban centres began paying some share of their transit costs.

A similar financing arrangement will be applied to the Greater Vancouver Regional District, he said, but Vancouver will have to pay its share of the operating deficit in 1974.

Services in Victoria have not been expanded greatly in the last year, said Lorimer, so the Capital Region will not likely have to finance any deficits this year.

Lorimer talked of the financing arrangement as a "proposal" and said he will meet with local government representatives shortly to discuss the plan.

He said he would be willing to listen to "suggestions" from the local authorities but when asked if he might change his mind Lorimer said "if they can put up a case where they think they can pay more, I'll be willing to listen."

The minister said he did not know how much money the region would actually have to pay but he said he doubted it would amount to more than one-half a mill in the first year.

"But the most important part of my suggestion," he said, "was to make the levy not be an over-all levy on taxpayers but be an amount raised by the areas that benefit from the transit services."

Under that system, the levy would not simply be applied across the board but could be

Interim legislation will be introduced in the house Thursday to deal with the current impasse in teacher-trustee bargaining in B.C.

Education Minister Eileen Daily said this morning she could not divulge the contents of the legislation before it is presented to the legislature but stressed that the bill is designed to deal only with the current situation.

"My intention is to provide legislation to prevent any further crisis," she said, adding that her responsibility is "to see school children in this province receive their education."

Both teacher and trustee representatives met with the minister Tuesday evening and reaffirmed that neither side intends to budge on the question of regional or province-wide bargaining.

The B.C. Teachers' Federation said trustees are breaking the law if they refuse to negotiate on an individual basis with the 68 school districts which have not yet settled their 1975 contracts.

The B.C. School Trustees' Association initially sought to have one negotiator to represent all school boards but have now agreed to a compromise to negotiate on a regional basis with 17 government-appointed conciliators.

Teachers say they will not travel to Vancouver to negotiate with the regional conciliators and BCSTA president Eileen Madson said the trustees "have no intention of returning to local bargaining for one more year."

The impasse comes just 11 days before the Nov. 15 deadline for all outstanding teachers' contract disputes to be settled.

Contracts not settled by that date must go to compulsory arbitration. But the same problem will likely arise because the trustees say they do not intend to appoint individual arbitrators for each district and the teachers say they will not accept a single arbiter.

Meanwhile some teachers in Coquitlam have been striking to protest regional bargaining and Jim MacFarlan, president of the BCTF, said teachers in 10 to 12 other districts are considering some action, including strikes or working-to-rule, to protest the situation.

MacFarlan said bargaining has been done on an individual basis for 25 years and changed the trustees are engaged in a "deliberate attempt to destroy collective bargaining."

The strike in Coquitlam was called off today.

U.S. Food Funding 'Paltry' Claims Canadian Delegation

ROME (FP) — Canada's delegation to the World Food Conference was not happy with the five-point program for dealing with world hunger presented Tuesday by U.S. Secretary of State, Henry Kissinger.

In his address to the opening session of the conference, Kissinger proposed that three new international agencies be set up and a number of programs be instituted. But these involve little new funding from the United States.

"Paltry" was how one Canadian official described the amounts involved — and he called upon the oil-exporting nations to bear most of the new financial burden of feeding the world and of paying for the agricultural development of the poorer nations.

The head of the Canadian delegation, Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan, expressed some concern with Kissinger's proposals for three new international agencies. "We shouldn't tie ourselves down with loads and loads of bureaucracy," he said.

Whelan also expressed fears that the 60 million extra tons of grain proposed by Kissinger to be held in an international reserve might be too much. "We won't use a grain bank against our producers," he said.

Canadian officials were even more upset than Whelan at the 60-million ton increase. Unless steps were taken to ensure that the reserve was isolated from commercial markets, it could hang over grain markets, pushing prices down, one official warned.

"The very existence of those stocks, no matter who holds them, could reduce prices."

To date, there has not been a satisfactory way of separating the depressing effect of world emergency reserves from commercial markets, the official said.

To make a reserve system work, there would have to be stiff penalties for nations that violated the safety provisions of the stockholding plan and if these were too stiff, grain exporting countries would not be likely to join the plan, he added.

An official of the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) of the United Nations explained, however, that the concern over the food reserve plan depends on how the stock levels are calculated.

But the Democrats had at least 62 seats in the 100-member Senate, 263 in the 435-member House and 35 of the 50 state governorships — with more of each apparently waiting to fall into their grasp with the completion of vote counting.

Among the Democratic winners were several who will have a chance to play a kingmaker's role in future. They include Representative Hugh Carey, who won New York's governorship; Jerry Brown, youthful governor-elect in California; and

Dr. McTaggart-Cowan, who headed the Arrow oil spill cleanup group, told reporters Tuesday that as international efforts have so far not produced agreement on control of territorial waters, Canada should act on its own.

The government should declare authority over waters which can be covered by marine surveillance systems and insist that foreign ships obey Canadian marine pollution laws, he said. Vessels breaking pollution laws should be impounded rather than fined.

Dr. McTaggart-Cowan, who spoke earlier to a marine pollution conference, also said that marine navigational control systems should be improved so that marine operations are at least as safe as air services.

Referring to the transport department's touted new system at Chedabucto Bay in Nova Scotia, he said, "I wouldn't put it on a fishing boat."

Dr. McTaggart-Cowan headed the federal group cleaning up the oil spill in Chedabucto Bay after the tanker Arrow foundered. The $4 million operation took four months to complete.

But Dr. McTaggart-Cowan suggested Canada should act now, announcing how far it will extend its authority. Then the marine traffic control systems should be improved greatly to keep a sharper eye on shipping.

Food is fuel and taste, and most of us seldom go beyond considering it in those contexts.

But, to Dr. Jean Mayer, professor of nutrition at Harvard University, the affect food has on various bodily functions is at least as important as the amount of salt it needs to make it palatable.

B.C. Rail Still Idle

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Railway operations were shut down for the second consecutive day today as about 150 of the corporation's 550 shopcraft tradesmen continued a walkout which began last Friday.

A B.C. Rail spokesman said all 120 workers in the northern regional centre of Prince George are continuing to picket along the 400 miles of track between Williams Lake and Fort Nelson.

Freight movement on the government-owned line is restricted to switching between the Canadian National Railway yards and Vancouver Wharves in North Vancouver.

Although 78 shopcraft members are on the job in North Vancouver, and another 320 in Squamish, the spokesman said since there are no trains out of the north there is little to do at the southern terminals. Passenger service to central interior cities also has been discontinued.

Union leader Norm Farley, meanwhile, said there is no split in the union ranks.

"The whole problem has been brought on by management's refusal to recognize that Prince George even exists," he said Tuesday night.

"The men in the north feel totally left out," he said.

'FAIR' OFFER SUITS FERRY FINDERS

Two Nanaimo men who salvaged a 77-foot B.C. ferry in July when they found it floating adrift said today they have been made an offer they won't refuse.

The provincial government's second offer of a salvage fee, "more than the previous offer of $1,800," according to B.C. Ferries spokesman Sheila Doby, will be accepted by the two.

John Martin and Donald Bohun found the boat adrift near a marine gas station close to its Nanaimo-Gabriola Island route.

He called the new offer "fair" and said it is "pretty close to 10 per cent of the boat's value."

Tory Rakes Lalonde's Free Ride

By IAIN HUNTER
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Prime Minister Trudeau and other government and company sources contradicted one another in trying to explain a flight to Israel by a cabinet minister aboard a Seagrams jet.

Trudeau said in the House that Health Minister Marc Lalonde flew to Israel, where he is the guest of the Israeli government, aboard the distillery's jet because this was proposed by that country's ambassador.

However, aides to the minister stated that Lalonde and Mrs. Lalonde were asked to make the flight by a member of the Bronfman family who owns more than 32 per cent interest in Distillers Corp. — Seagrams Ltd., public relations firm representing the company confirmed this version.

Sinclair Stevens (PC York-Simcoe) who raised the issue in the House, suggested later that the Trudeau administration is setting a precedent under which cabinet ministers and their families take trips at the expense of private interests.

He noted that Mrs. Trudeau is in Japan at present as the guest of a Hong Kong shipping magnate.

The prime minister, who has said he sees nothing wrong with his wife accepting the invitation to Japan, refused to talk to reporters trying to ask him about the Lalonde trip when he came out of the House Tuesday.

But he angered Stevens in the chamber when he gave what the MP called "flippancy" answers to his questions.

Trudeau stated that he didn't know why Lalonde decided to go to Israel on the distillery's jet, but added that "perhaps it was an attempt to save fuel."

In the Commons Stevens recalled that Lalonde has attacked brewery advertising in Canada, and asked Trudeau if

WASHINGTON — Democrats, riding a political tidal wave spawned by scandal and fed by inflation and unemployment, swept the 1974 elections Tuesday by tightening their grip on Congress and building new power in the nation's statehouses.

Despite President Ford's warnings against a "legislative dictatorship," the voters gave Democrats House and Senate victories that approached a numerical "veto-proof" congress.

President Ford had three color television sets tuned in on the returns, then conceded: "I have accepted the verdict: Those who lose often come back to win another day."

Democrats, with suddenly rosy visions of the presidential race in 1976, rushed out public statements full of promise.

"We will win the White House in 1976" if Ford doesn't change his economic programs, said Texas Senator Lloyd Bentsen, who wants the Democratic nomination himself. Senator Henry Jackson of Washington, another hopeful, thought he would make his decision by year's end.

Jackson added: "People are just fed up... they're fed up with high prices and obscene profits."

And a NBC survey of voters as they left the polls found that 20 per cent of those who had voted Republican in 1972 went to the Democrats this time and that disapproval of Ford's pardon of Nixon was a major factor in their decisions.

The winners in Tuesday's election will not take over until January. Until then, the current office-holders carry on.

For members of Congress, that means a so-called "lame-duck" session starting later this month. The list of unfinished business includes a major trade-reform bill which Canada and other trading partners of the United States want to see approved.

The senators elected Tuesday get a six-year term, the representatives two years and the governors either two or four years depending on state laws.

Most of the best-known names in the Senate survived the voting.

But Senate seats in five states — Florida, Vermont, North Dakota, Colorado and Kentucky — switched to the Democrats from the Republicans.

The House of Representatives was headed towards a two-thirds Democratic membership, with more than 40 Republicans ousted.

And Democrats replaced Republican governors in New York, California, Massachusetts, Connecticut and a clutch of smaller states — ample compensation for their loss of South Carolina to a Republican and Maine to a Democratic renegade.

Parts of the electoral picture remained to be filled in early today. Some House seats were still undecided and recounts were in the offing for the Ohio governorship and a couple of see-saw Senate places.

But the Democrats had at least 62 seats in the 100-member Senate, 263 in the 435-member House and 35 of the 50 state governorships — with more of each apparently waiting to fall into their grasp with the completion of vote counting.

Tough Spill Curbs Urged

OTTAWA (CP) — Growing pollution dangers in Canadian coastal waters demand tough new measures and vastly improved marine traffic control systems from the federal government, says oil spill expert P. D. McTaggart-Cowan, executive-director of the Science Council of Canada.

Dr. McTaggart-Cowan, who headed the Arrow oil spill cleanup group, told reporters Tuesday that as international efforts have so far not produced agreement on control of territorial waters, Canada should act on its own.

The government should declare authority over waters which can be covered by marine surveillance systems and insist that foreign ships obey Canadian marine pollution laws, he said. Vessels breaking pollution laws should be impounded rather than fined.

VANCOUVER SEEKS OWN RENT BUREAU

VANCOUVER (CP) — City council wants power to establish its own rental accommodation bureau with the same powers as the provincial rentalman.

Council voted Tuesday to ask the provincial government for a change in the Landlord and Tenant Act that would allow the city to establish such a bureau to deal with landlord-tenant disputes.

Alderman Harry Rankin said a city rental authority with the same powers as the rentalman could do a better job than the provincial office. He described the rentalman's office as being in "chaotic condition."

The rental accommodation grievance board had requested it be disbanded because the opening of the rentalman's office had reduced calls to the city agency but urged that its staff be retained to provide an advisory service.

ifornia; and Senate victors John Glenn of Ohio, a former astronaut, and Dale Bumpers of Arkansas, the state's current governor.

George McGovern, buried by Nixon in the 1972 presidential contest, won again in South Dakota. So did Thomas Eagleton of Missouri, dumped by McGovern as the vice-presidential candidate when his history of mental treatment came out.

George Wallace of Alabama, ran up an overwhelming victory over a hapless Republican and announced that he has "plans" for 1976. Now in a wheelchair because of a 1972 assassination attempt, Wallace has tried three times before for the presidency and seems game to try again.

Many of Nixon's closest political allies and staunchest defenders in the House were victims of public disillusion over the Watergate scandals.

Four Republican members of the House judiciary committee who defended Nixon against impeachment charges were defeated, along with such Nixon loyalists as Dan Kuykendall of Tennessee and Earl Landgrebe of Indiana.

WASHINGTON — Prosecutors at the Watergate cover-up trial today recalled to the witness stand the man who first disclosed the existence of Richard Nixon's White House taping system.

Alexander Butterfield, a former White House assistant who disclosed the existence of the taping system in the summer of 1973 before the Senate Watergate committee, resumed the process of authenticating 26 tapes the prosecution wants the jury to hear.

Butterfield and a series of witnesses will be heard before the tapes are introduced into evidence beginning next week.

Associate Special Prosecutor James Neal said Tuesday he is anxious to complete the preliminaries and get to the tapes. He said they are "what I consider this case to be all about."

Butterfield, now administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration, said today he had listened to 35 hours of tapes over 10 afternoons last month.

He testified to recommending 197 changes in the identities of voices or words on transcripts as originally prepared by the special prosecutor's office.

Defence attorneys, meanwhile, continued to attack the reliability of the tapes as accurate records.

Meanwhile, John Mitchell and John Ehrlichman today asked for a mistrial, claiming their defence had been hopelessly prejudiced by long-missing evidence that surfaced this week.

U.S. District Judge John Sirica, who has denied one mistrial motion and has another pending stemming from the same incident, received the Mitchell and Ehrlichman briefs but took no immediate action.

The mistrial motions were triggered by the disclosure Monday of a two-year-old memorandum by bugging conspirator E. Howard Hunt linking the Nixon administration to pledges of hush money and pardons to the Watergate burglars shortly following their arrests.

Spectrum Fridays Shorter

Spectrum community secondary school on Carey Rd. is abolishing Friday afternoon classes.

As of Nov. 29 Spectrum students will attend classes through the noon hour on Fridays and dismissal time will be 1:30 p.m.

Parents voted 525 in favor of the change, 13 opposed, with 260 parents not voting.

The change is an effort to make it easier for the more than 300 Spectrum students who hold part-time jobs to keep up with their grades and still hold down their weekend job.

For other students Friday afternoons will be used for special classes, inter-mural competitions and student-teacher meetings.

BAD START OVERCOME BY OLD CAMPAIGNER

Times News Services

KENSETT, Ark. — Wilbur Mills woke up Tuesday morning and found that his car wouldn't start, an inauspicious beginning for the most important election of his career.

However, Mills (Dem. Ark.) chairman of the House of Representatives ways and means committee, defeated 31 year old Republican Judy Petty, less than half his age to keep the House seat he has held since 1953.

In New York Rep. Hugh L. Carey, 55, broke a 16-year Republican hold by defeating the GOP incumbent, Malcolm Wilson, 60.

Carey's victory immediately projected him into speculation for the 1976 Democratic national ticket by virtue of the state's traditional and electoral vote impact. Equally, important for the party, it potentially strengthened the Democratic base for whoever the party standard-bearer is two years hence.

In Washington State an all-time low turnout of voters re-elected Sen. Warren G. Magnuson and the state's six incumbent congressmen adding Democrat Don Bonker to the house delegation.

In Massachusetts, former state Rep. Michael S. Dukakis, 40, defeated Republican Gov. Francis W. Sargent, 59, who ironically was one of the most liberal GOP governors and was among those who most outspokenly divorced himself from the administration and activities of former President Nixon.

Nixon was too weak to watch the election returns on television in Long Beach, California but he voted earlier by absentee ballot.

Florida governor — Ruebin Astew regarded by many as a potential Wallace-stopper in the 1976 presidential race, easily defeated Republican Jerry Thomas, a West Palm Beach banker, Askew, a moderate, said a month ago he would reject a draft for president and would demand that his name be removed from any presidential primary ballot in 1976, but his name doubtless will continue to be heard in 1976 speculation.

California elected its youngest governor in more than a century. Democrat Edmund G. Brown, 36, formerly California's Secretary of State, takes the office once held by his father who was beaten for re-election by Ronald Reagan eight years ago.

FIRE VICTIM'S CONDITION POOR

Thirty-nine-year-old Betty Blade remains in poor condition in Victoria General Hospital today with burns received in a fire in her apartment at 840 Craigflower Tuesday morning.

Esquimalt police said the woman apparently had fallen asleep on a chesterfield while smoking and awoke when her pyjamas and a blanket caught fire.

She was discovered by her husband Robert who had returned home to remind her of an appointment she had made later in the day.

The couple's only child, a teen-aged daughter, was at school.

TRANSIT

Levyed against shopping centres or commercial areas that specifically benefit from bus services.

Lorimer also said regional districts could decide on which areas within the district actually use transit services and exclude any levy from areas not serviced by buses.

If the system is averted to, operating deficits for 1975 would be totalled at the end of the year and in January, 1976, the Capital Region would be charged their share of the shortfall.

Changes in legislation would be required during the spring session of the legislature, said Lorimer, to allow municipalities to levy varying mill rates within the district.

Lorimer said the financing plan is not the first step towards placing the full transit costs on local governments since the local authorities could never raise the full amount.

Capital costs are the biggest expense, he said.

While the minister's interview comments indicated he hasn't specified precisely how the transit levy will be applied, Saanich Mayor Ed Lum appeared to be under a different impression when he touched on the subject at a meeting of the Greater Victoria Inter-municipal Committee on Tuesday.

Regional board chairman Jim Campbell said the board had been informed of Municipal Affairs Minister James Lorimer's financing proposal for transit over a year ago and at that time expressed its concern and asked the minister to reconsider his position.

"Ever since the board said they didn't like the financing formula there has been no more communication and the transit committee (set up between the district and provincial transit director Vic Parker) stopped having meetings," said Campbell.

The board is "ready and waiting" to talk to the government about the financing formula, said Campbell, but Lorimer has made no move to open communications on the subject.

The region's major disagreement with the formula, he said, is the government is unilaterally putting an extra financial burden on taxpayers without giving the region any additional source of revenue.

Placing the tax burden on the commercial or shopping areas, rather than applying an across the board levy, said Campbell, simply places an indirect tax on property owners.

"I'm willing to meet with the minister on a moment's notice to discuss the proposition," said Campbell.

"But they are apparently not prepared to listen to our modifications and if so they're not going to get any co-operation from us."

Crosswalk, No Lights for House

Highways Minister Graham Lea doesn't intend to install any traffic lights in the legislature but he said Tuesday he'd consider providing a "crosswalk" for party-switching Hugh Curtis of Saanich.

The minister got off the jibe while responding to opposition quips about installation of traffic lights to control members' speeches. The system is designed to tell Speaker Gordon Dowding when allotted debating time is up.

The opposition had asked if the lights were installed with permission of the highways minister.

Curtis, who has just switched to the Conservative to the Social Credit party, was not in the house for the exchange.

Limits on debate, meanwhile, were imposed for the first time in the B.C. legislature Tuesday — against an MLA who seldom speaks in the house.

Frank Fichter (S.C. Boundary-Similkameen) was speaking during second reading of the new marketing act when Speaker Gordon Dowding interrupted to say the 10-minute limit on debate had expired.

The legislature changed its rules last spring to limit all debate in the house but opposition members strenuously objected.

When Dowding faced his first move to impose the new rules he was met with jeers from the opposition benches and one S.C. member shouted "democracy has died."

The Speaker said in an interview later he has rigged up a system of lights, in the speaker's box to alert him of the time limits.

Clerks of the housetime the debate and flash on a green light when the MLA has two minutes left and flash a red light when his time is up.

Dowding said he wants to set up a light on the clerk's desk, so all MLAs will be warned when to begin winding down their speech.

But not all the party caucuses have agreed to the light system yet, he said.

Different time limits have been set for each kind of debate in the house but during second reading of a bill the mover is entitled to 60 minutes, party leaders can have unlimited time and other speakers can have 40 minutes.

During the evening sitting Tuesday, the question came up again when the S.C. member tried to convince the Speaker that Ed Smith (S.C. North Peace view) should be allowed full 40 minutes of debate in the evening, after beginning his speech in the afternoon.

Dowding ruled, however, that Smith was only entitled to the 21 minutes remaining in the speech he had begun 19 minutes before the house adjourned for the dinner break.

Reports Unstudied

Attorney-General Alex Macdonald said Tuesday he had not studied two reports commissioned by Rentalsman Barrie Clark before introducing amendments to the Landlord Tenant Act Monday.

Reports by Dr. John Cragg and Clarkson, Gordon and Co., were commissioned to recommend ways and means of determining an allowable rent increase, now set by legislation at 10.6 per cent.

"Final reports weren't available," said Macdonald, replying to a question in the house from Liberal Leader David Anderson.

Macdonald said legislation was drafted after preliminary reports and "countless face to face meetings."

He added University of B.C. professor Cragg's final report was "just received and to what extent it varies from previous ones I don't know. But I think all the information would be available to members so they will be able to make a judicious decision on the legislation."

Asked by MLA Allan Williams (L. West Vancouver-Howe Sound) whether the Clarkson report would also be made available, Macdonald said:

"I will consider that — that again is something that just arrived."

Rift Seen In French Labor War

PARIS (Reuters) — French President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing's government vowed today it would not permit a wave of strikes in nationalized industries to overturn its anti-inflation program.

The first break in the series of strikes, which have badly affected the French economy, came today with a return to work by coal miners in Lorraine.

But a three-week-old mail strike continued, rail services were disrupted again and gas and electricity workers planned more power cuts.

The government, which has suggested the strikes are politically motivated and orchestrated by the Communists, embarked on an all-out effort to win public support for its effort to hold down pay increases.

President Giscard d'Estaing told a Cabinet meeting: "France is engaged in a decisive struggle against inflation, on which depends the maintenance of employment. Priority must be given to this struggle which concerns the fate and future of every Frenchman. This will be continued."

Giscard d'Estaing's statement was seen as a display of strength and a sign that the government would not easily give in to the demands of workers in nationalized industries.

The mail strike has had the most serious economic impact, with almost no mail deliveries for the last three weeks. Firms that do business by mail virtually have had to halt operations.

Prime Minister Jacques Chirac, who had openly suggested the strikes are political, said today they threatened to paralyze the essential services and life of the country.

Coal Talks Break Down; Strike Sure

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — The on-again, off-again negotiations between the nation's coal companies and the miners' union sputtered to another stop Tuesday, and hope of averting a strike next Monday night disappeared. The main question was how long it will last.

United Mine Workers' President Arnold Miller walked out of a negotiating session in the early hours of Tuesday saying of the companies, "With what they've handed us tonight, they've declared a strike in the coal fields."

Later in the day a spokesman for the union said there will probably be further face-to-face bargaining this week, and that "we don't consider the talks broken off."

Miller, on leaving the negotiating session, said there is not enough time left to get a new contract ratified by the union membership before the present pact expires next Monday night, and that in any case "the membership would not ratify what they gave us."

The industry told a different story: "We gave them an offer that in my opinion has not been exceeded in any negotiations in major industry in total scope," said Guy Farmer, negotiator for the Bituminous Coal Operators Association.

The U.M.W.'s 120,000 working members produce about 70 per cent of the nation's coal.

Petersen Opts to Quit

WASHINGTON (WP) — Assistant attorney-general Henry Petersen, a key figure in the original Watergate investigation, is retiring at the end of this year, it was announced Tuesday.

At the Justice Department, Attorney General William Saxbe said in a statement praising Petersen that "his decision to retire is completely his own."

Saxbe reportedly tried to persuade Petersen to stay on until mid-1975.

White House press secretary Ron Nessen also told reporters Petersen had not been asked to resign.

As head of the Criminal Division, Petersen was in charge of the original Watergate investigation until the Special Prosecution Force was set up in June 1973.

He was later criticized when White House tape transcripts revealed that Petersen had passed along Watergate grand jury reports to President Nixon in April 1973, a time when Nixon's top aides were the investigation's prime targets.

According to several close associates, Petersen, who received a pin for 30 years of federal service only last month, had wished to retire as early as 1972 or 1973, but did not wish to leave under a cloud.

Nixon 'Weak'

LONG BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Former president Richard Nixon's doctor describes Nixon's condition as "terribly physically weak," after disclosing that Nixon's right lung has collapsed.

Hospital spokesman Norman Nager said Dr. John Langren's report Tuesday meant there was "an inactive area of living tissue" involving a small part of the organ, but the condition is more commonly defined as a lung collapse.

FORGED LETTER AUTHOR KNOWN

VANCOUVER (CP) — RCMP chief superintendent Mark Marcus said Tuesday police officers know the author of a forged letter to Senator Ed Lawson.

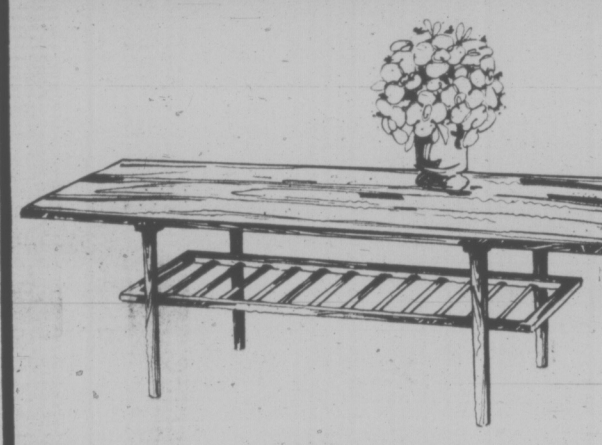

He said Senator Lawson received a letter Monday in which the author took credit for another letter, allegedly written by Arnie Van Campen, one of Premier Dave Barrett's assistants.

The first letter criticized the Teamsters' union. Senator Lawson is president of the Teamsters' joint council for B.C. and international vice-president of the union.

"He has done this sort of thing before," said the superintendent, referring to the forger who lives in Vancouver. He said he did not know how the letterhead from the premier's office was obtained.

Chief Marcus said he did not think the premier would wish to lay charges.

No Roses in Rental Land

That was a rueful, self-deprecating statement Attorney General Alex Macdonald made after announcing new amendments to the Landlord and Tenant Act in the legislature Monday. I wouldn't expect to come out smelling like a rose in this kind of assignment, Macdonald said. Indeed, he didn't. Landlords are threatening to withhold unoccupied apartments from the market and tenants plan to lobby the government caucus against the new rent ceiling.

But it is hard to have much sympathy for the attorney general. Why did the government start meddling in the marketplace in the first place? The original eight per cent rent increase ceiling had the effect of delaying apartment construction starts and gave a few landlords an excuse to suspend maintenance. The new 10.6 per cent ceiling satisfied nobody. To date the net effect of the government's effort in the landlord and tenant field has been mass antagonism. That's not much of a track record as the housing crisis shows signs of escalating.

Exempting new rental accommodation from any rent controls for five years is also a mixed blessing.

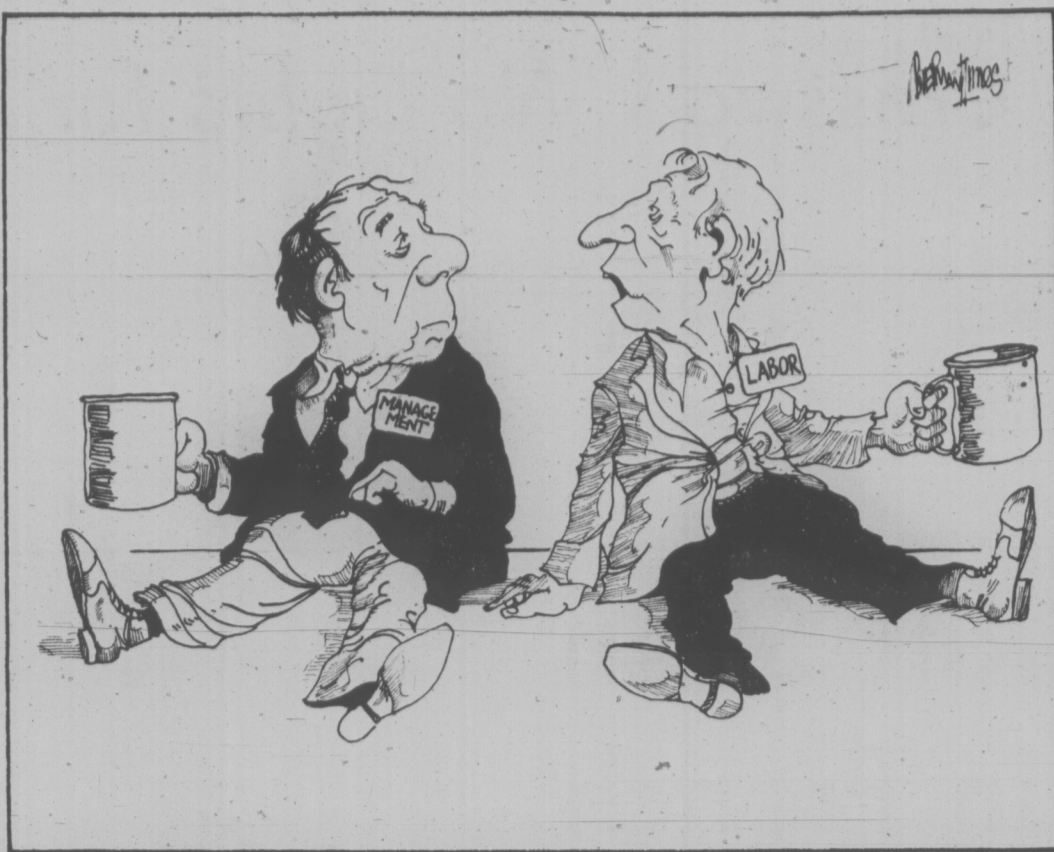

The government hopes the measure will encourage new apartment construction — a fact that remains in doubt considering high interest rates and lack of mortgage money. It could also result in older houses containing a few suites being torn down to make way for jerry built apartments designed for a useful life not exceeding five years.

One bright spot among the amendments is that security deposits will be limited to one half month's rent, and the landlord holding the deposit will have to pay the tenant an eight per cent annual interest rate on the deposit. In the past some landlords charged outlandish security deposits, and more than one tenant had difficulties retrieving his deposit when vacating the premises in good order. Since landlords have the use of the deposits, often for years at a time, interest payments are only fair and equitable.

Tenants have little to complain about. Raising the annual rent increase ceiling 2.6 per cent is not going to cause much hardship. Under the old eight per cent ceiling a landlord charging $200 per month for an apartment could increase the rent $16 per month annually.

At 10.6 per cent the annual increase on the same apartment would be a little over $20 per month annually. While allowing landlords who renovate their premises to charge a rent increase of up to 12 per cent of the renovation costs annually seems fair, the 10.6 per cent rent ceiling may be too conservative. One of the government's own consultants reportedly recommended increases of up to 29 per cent. Other consultants agreed the 10.6 per cent figure insured a fair return on investment.

Only time will tell whether the government has correctly gauged a situation it probably wishes it had never bothered fiddling with. Meanwhile, landlord and tenant groups have every right to lobby the Barrett administration. But it is irresponsible for landlords to talk of bulldozing apartments and withholding suites from the market. If they have a strong case they should gather their ledgers and show the government the figures in black and red. Perhaps the government should consider exceptions to the 10.6 per cent ceiling in specific operations. At this point the rules should be given a chance to work unless it can be proven that someone's ox is being gored.

Walking Tightrope Backwards

OTTAWA — Finance Minister John Turner loves to use vivid phrases that convey an image both of a challenge, any challenge, and a risk. Seated in a high-backed armchair in the drawing room of 24 Sussex, leaning forward as he always does if about to close a sale, Turner told the 10 premiers and Prime Minister Trudeau what he thinks about the state of Canada's economy.

"We are walking," said Turner, "along a tightrope, backwards."

Last week's meeting produced, as all such affairs must produce, or be marked down as failure, a handful of more or less hard decisions — a slow-down of non-industrial, heavy construction; more money for low-cost housing; agreement to try to develop a federal-provincial food bank to make Canadian agricultural surpluses available to the world's hungry.

Edgy and Suspicious

The success of the five-hour rap session, though, lay not in policies but in attitudes. The premiers came to Ottawa edgy and suspicious. Only six weeks ago Trudeau had called them impotent. Suddenly, without even advising his own cabinet, he invited them to Ottawa.

None of the premiers bothered in their replies to let Trudeau know what they wanted to discuss; typically Bill Davis of Ontario and Allan Blakeney of Saskatchewan released their personal agendas to the press on the eve of the conference — respectively, funds for housing and a food bank.

The meeting began informally. Justin Trudeau, side by side with his father, greeted the premiers in the hallway of 24 Sussex. Conversation rambled through the lunch of gazpacho soup, lemon sole and chocolate mousse, washed down with sweet white wine.

The group got down to work in the drawing room, Trudeau at one end with his back to the piano, the premiers circled around him in sofas and armchairs. In essence, the premiers bought the Trudeau-Turner thesis of Canada's economy as far healthier than most but poised delicately between recession and inflation and threatened less from within than from the danger that other western countries, notably Italy and Britain, will slide one by one into a depression until Canada also finally is dragged down.

PREMIER BLAKENEY
... clash of vigorous positions

Agreement on that analysis made agreement on specifics easy. The money supply should match the pace of economic expansion rather than be restrained; the construction slowdown should be applied only in high-growth regions, essentially Ontario and the west. As important as any of these to the shaping of future policy was the recognition that Canada's economic self-interest now demands that we do what we can to help others.

"No meeting of this kind that I've ever been to," one premier told me, "has ever been less nationalist in tone, and more internationalist in outlook."

Much of the time the group didn't even discuss Canadian affairs. A focus of concern was Canada's relationship with the United States and the growing prospects for a U.S. recession, which Canada could not escape. The meeting agreed Canada should avoid any measures which might slow the U.S. recovery, and in particular should provide, in the short term, as much oil and gas as could be spared.

Sticking Point

It's impossible of course for the provinces and Ottawa ever to agree on everything. The sticking point was the federal-provincial conflict over respective shares of resource taxes. "We put our position very vigorously," said Blakeney. "Turner and the prime minister put their position vigorously. Now we'll have to see what comes out in the budget."

The premiers, and the public, will have to contain their impatience. Turner has promised his budget by November 15. He's far behind schedule — no part of the document yet is written — and Turner has advised Trudeau he cannot meet his deadline. A new date has been set and Turner probably will present his budget on Nov. 18.

The delay may prove worth waiting for. One cause of Turner's budget-making difficulties is that his revenues are running far ahead of forecasts and this, coupled with the holddown in government spending has created the possibility of a budget surplus. A budget surplus is precisely the wrong prescription to deal with an economic slow-down and one way Turner could get rid of his extra millions would be by a tax cut.

United Appeal Needs a Hand

In an age of increasing cynicism as government takes over more of the roles traditionally occupied by charities, the United Appeal has a difficult job convincing people of the real need that still exists in the community. Yet more than 25,000 persons — about 10 per cent of the population — in the Greater Victoria area benefit from appeal programs. And over 90 cents of every donated dollar goes to services ranging from the Salvation Army to the Native Friendship Centre. Few if any other charitable or government programs can boast such low administrative costs.

This year the Greater Victoria appeal is asking $698,000, an increase of 10 per cent over last year which hardly covers inflation. To date the campaign has received $303,000 or 43 per cent of its goal. Last year at this time the campaign had received 67 per cent of its goal and went on to reach its target. In order to facilitate slow collections, especially in the business sector the campaign has been extended to November 15. Appeal officials emphasize the importance of getting the money in as fast as possible. And if a residential canvasser left an envelope in the door-to-door canvas when householders were out, they ask that it be sent in as quickly as possible.

At a time of double digit inflation, the appeal assumes special importance to the agencies that depend on it for part of their funds. More than 4,000 volunteers working in the various agencies will see the funds are put to good use. It is also interesting to note that the elimination of volunteer giving would mean various government levels shouldering another financial burden — a burden that would be added to the tax bill. One final concerted effort by the citizens of this area and our community will be a better place to live in. Perhaps we cannot all afford to give generously, but if we all gave something it would be enough.

HAROLD GREER

Wanted: One Female Solomon

TORONTO — The women's liberation slogan, steady men, there's a lot to be said for it — gets much of its push from the gut feeling that in marriage the law should recognize the wife as an equal partner, economically speaking.

The law doesn't do that now, not by a long shot. Basically, the law says matrimonial property is owned by the spouse who earned the money to pay for it, which is to say, in most cases the husband.

This creates no end of problems and much injustice if the marriage breaks down and the property has to be distributed. But even for continuing marriages, and where the spouses regard themselves in practice as economic partners, it has become a big thing politically. A lot of wives can get very uptight over the fact that the law regards them as dependents, supplicants, some kind of chattel and generally speaking second-class citizens.

So much so, indeed, that when the Ontario government brought forward some modest proposals last June for improving the situation, it had to promise to do nothing until the women had been heard from.

Male Decisions

"We don't want any more men making legislation for women," declared Laura Sabia of St. Catharines, who is chairman of the government's council on the status of women.

The idea then was to have a big conference of women from across the province to discuss the proposals and tell the government what to do. The conference has now been held and was, as such things go, a resounding success. The only trouble is that the government is no wiser now than it was in June.

Last June, the government had before it a rather complicated scheme from the Ontario Law Reform Commission for treating marriage as an economic partnership in law when the marriage ends, either by death or by breakdown. But as for treating marriage as an economic partnership while the marriage lasts, the best the commission could suggest was that this could be done for the matrimonial home alone; all other assets, it said, would have to continue to be governed by the existing law of separate ownership that is, owned by the spouse who earned the money to pay for them.

The commission's reasons for this position were twofold. One was that women are not prejudiced in a material sense by the existing law as long as the marriage remains harmonious; it is only when there is a breakdown and the matrimonial assets have to be distributed that discrimination arises. Therefore, the need for reform would be satisfied in the great majority of cases by applying the concept of economic partnership when a marriage ends.

The second reason, more implied than stated, was that the commission couldn't figure out a legal scheme for treating marriage as an economic partnership while it lasts. Quebec, the commission noted rather lamely, had such a scheme until 1970 and had to abandon it because most people were getting married under a different regime; under the old system of community property, the husband administered it and the wife amounted to a legal fiction.

Mrs. Sabia and others, however, greeted the commission's report with the complaint that it wasn't good enough and that women wanted a legal system which recognizes marriage as an economic partnership from the start, and not just at the end. If the resolutions adopted by the recent conference here are any indication, this is indeed a view held by women generally, but the ladies couldn't figure out how to bring it off any more than the Law Reform Commission could.

Witness, for example, this resolution: "Resolved that the fact of marriage itself should create new property rights based on the marriage." Yes, indeed, but what rights, precisely? Or this one: "Resolved that household goods should be co-owned." Does that mean she can't buy the groceries without his consent and he can't sell the old television without hers?

Admittedly, the problem is difficult and perhaps insuperable. But there are at least three basic questions that have to be answered before the concept of marriage as an economic partnership can take on legal form and definition.

The first concerns property owned separately by the two parties before marriage. Does it automatically become jointly-owned upon marriage, unless some other contractual arrangement is specifically agreed upon?

Common Pot

The second concerns assets or property acquired during marriage. Does everything go into the common pot, so to speak, or would some acquisitions (gifts or bequests to one spouse from a relative, for example) be excluded? Would one spouse be legally a partner in the other spouse's business ventures, assets and losses?

The third concerns support obligations if the marriage breaks down. If marriage is, in law, an economic partnership and the partnership is dissolved, how can there continue to be an obligation for one party to support the other? If none is admitted how shall the support of children, if any, be shared? Would desertion constitute dissolution, entitling the deserter to half of the assets?

The council on the status of women now has a questionnaire out seeking answers to these questions, and a host of others, before making its formal submission to the government. Who knows, perhaps there's a female Solomon out there somewhere.

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS

Dangerous Picture?

It is my understanding from reading several articles that there have been serious injuries — some resulting in surgery — inflicted on children attempting "Evel Knievel stunts" such as the one featured on the front page of the Times recently. As a parent who has been attempting to teach my children the proper use of a bicycle and that these stunts are very dangerous, I strongly feel that this picture enhances the stunt rather than explaining the potential dangers. Children looking at the picture will probably think it really looks like fun without being aware of the possible consequences.

As adults we can either agree or disagree with items as they are reported but children can be so easily led into believing this is the thing to do simply because it appeared in the paper and therefore has a "stamp of approval".

My personal opinion is that more care should be taken in featuring such pictures — and I felt strongly enough to let you know in writing. — Joan Johnson, 576 St. Patrick St.

Right to Life

Ban S.A. Wine

In reference to the views expressed recently by readers on the banning of South African wines, I feel obliged to offer a few observations.

As a new Canadian I object strongly to the inference that Canada is no better than South Africa in its treatment of minority groups. For a start the black population is not a "minority" but the vast majority in that unhappy land.

South Africa is and has been for years a police state run by a small minority with all the wealth against the interests of the majority, who also happen to be black. A deliberate policy of torture and harassment is maintained to coerce that majority into an acceptance of the situation.

However, cracks in the apartheid system, or what the government now prefers to call "parallel development" have begun to appear. Anything we can do to help that process should be done. Does the reader perhaps remember the appeasement of Hitler and Mussolini?

Last month the South African government closed the colored council in Cape Province for speaking out, showing again the falseness of its contention that it represents black and colored peoples interest.

During the election in April the Progressive Party won seven seats after having had only one in the last 13 years, indication that liberal-minded whites in South Africa need our help in keeping the pressure on the government to change its ways.

When one reads from their own accounts that South Africa is spending $900 million on defence this financial year one wonders who this is to defend them ing people, it is for internal police action against their own citizens. Must we continue to finance this kind of action, are there not alternative sources to keep B.C. wine fanciers happy?

The Ontario Council of Churches recently passed a resolution encouraging resistance by all Christians to the unjust society in South Africa. If the good people of South Africa feel this way surely affluent Canadians can find it possible to support their efforts. — R. Garbutt, 3888 Shelbourne St.

From the Times of November 6, 1914

Under the headline "Treasury Seems To Be Drained Quite Dry," The Times reported a number of provincial government employees were to be fired. "The provincial government has got to the end of its financial tether and is now adding to the list of unemployed in Victoria by the dismissal of all temporary employees, and it is expected that a number of permanent officials will also be let out. At the end of the present month from 60 to 80 men, who have been in the provincial service for periods running from a few months to some years will be out of a position. This action of the government is its first tangible confession that it is practically without funds."

Insulin Shortage Feared

THE GLOBE AND MAIL

There has been an attitude existent in Canada in the production and sale of certain life-supporting pharmaceuticals that has carried with it the clear precedent of government approval and vocalized active support.

To illustrate, one need only look back to the origin of the Connaught laboratories, established more than half a century ago under the auspices of the University of Toronto to produce antitoxin at a time when more than 400 Ontario residents were dying annually of diphtheria. These people either could not afford or could not obtain the antitoxin they needed because there was only one producer in North America — in the United States — controlling price and supply.

The attitude at Connaught was that it would supply needed drugs to the public at a price as close to cost as possible. It was an attitude most apparent in Connaught's manufacture and sale of insulin to diabetics — making it available to Canadians at a cost of 25 to 35 per cent less than U.S. diabetics had to pay to suppliers in their country. It was an attitude reinforced by the chairman of the Crown-owned Canadian Development Corp., which bought Connaught from the university in 1972, when he said that Connaught's operations would continue to be guided by the same principles.

Dr. Albert Fisher, president of the Canadian Diabetic Association, and a former associate director of Connaught, believes that one major Canadian meat packer is hoarding cow and pig pancreases (from which insulin is extracted) and buying up pancreases from other packers.

"I think they are holding them back to raise prices," he says, and he has predicted that Canadian insulin users could be "facing a serious price increase" as a result. He also said that he "wouldn't be at all surprised" if there were shortages of insulin in future.

Stuart McInnes, executive vice-president of Connaught, says there should be no immediate shortage because "we have a fair stockpile" but he acknowledges that two problems have become increasingly noticeable in recent months: "the great escalation in prices and the fact that it is a bit difficult to get all the pancreases we need."

In the meanwhile, more and more insulin is being needed in the world (Connaught sells to 96 countries) as developing countries expand on their diagnosis and treatment of diabetes, as more and more older people with the prolonging of life — develop diabetes. In the meanwhile, too, animal pancreases are increasingly being put to other uses.

Dr. Fisher is not a flighty man given to scare-stories. His speculations are cause for grave concern — not in a hot, emotional way with the assigning of blame willy-nilly (it is noted that two major packers in Canada have already said they are not involved in hoarding); but Dr. Fisher's concern should bring quick federal response.

Europe's Moderate Communists

By ANDRE FONTAINE
Le Monde, Paris

does exist, especially among the Basque separatists responsible for the assassination of Premier Carrero Blanco. These groups do not hesitate to resort to armed action.

It is significant that the softening of the Communists' doctrinal positions comes when everywhere in Mediterranean Europe they are close to power and in Portugal share it already. Violence does not seem necessary when the inability of capitalist states to face the world economic crises and social imbalances is leading a growing number of voters to put faith in those who promise them a society, at once more equitable and more rational.

Robots Gone

Elementary tactical intelligence should thus suffice to lead the Communist parties to adopt a moderate line that respects existing institutions. But doubtless there is more: The party workers and Communist leaders — it is enough to watch them in the flesh to be convinced of this — have not escaped the sociological changes of the Western countries. The time of the robots remote-controlled from Moscow, if it ever existed, died with the myth of Stalinist infallibility. It is, incidentally, manifest that in the East there is too much need for Western technology and capital for there to be much encouragement for violent adventures: The Chilean tragedy is still too much in the minds of all the Communist leaders, and who knows how the United States would react?

The Americans, it would seem, find themselves embarrassed by the erosion of their positions in Mediterranean Europe. For having recklessly bet on regimes cut off from all popular roots, they lost two vital bridgeheads. Admittedly Portugal has stated its intention to remain in NATO, in spite of the presence in its government of a Communist deputy premier. As to Greece, if it has left NATO, like France it remains a member of the Atlantic alliance, and the vigor with which the Communists are denouncing as premature the Greek elections scheduled for November confirms the impression that they have little chance of winning more than 15 per cent of the seats.

The United States would be wrong, though, to view these events through the spectacles of the Cold War. Much as the Eastern Communist regimes are keeping their distance vis-a-vis the Soviet model, the West European parties are differentiating themselves as they approach power and ally themselves with other political groupings. It is significant that in France, where the current trend in favor of the left has been so powerful over the last 18 months, the Communist party has regressed rather than progressed in elections, whereas the Socialist party — supposed to be its "hostage" according to government spokesmen — has registered a spectacular advance. This means that the memories of the Stalin era and of the invasion of Czechoslovakia still weigh on the image of the French Communist party. Perhaps it cannot enlarge its area of influence without establishing more clearly the distance between itself and the superpower of which it used to proclaim itself the unconditional ally. If that day came, many things would change, not only in France but in all of Europe, perhaps inclusive of the Europe east of the Iron Curtain.

MARCHAIS
... woos Gaullists

As always when an extreme left movement modifies its political line, a more extremist movement arises on its left. That is the case in all four countries. In France, the radicalism that had its high point in May, 1968, appears to have lost ground since, and the "Maoists" are now only a handful. But "gauchistes," as the French have called them, have much increased influence inside of the rejuvenated Socialist party.

In Italy and in Portugal, the old anarchist heritage is surfacing. Particularly in Lisbon, there is not a day when the radical press does not denounce "revisionist" compromises. In Spain, the clandestine nature of politics does not permit a clear idea of the balance of forces, but a Marxist-Leninist party favorable to the Peking's ideas

Long Quarrel Ends

The same game is played by the Spanish Communist party, now reconciled with the Kremlin after a long quarrel. The party's boss, Santiago Carrillo, has taken up contacts in almost all quarters, including the army. And, together with Rafael Calvo Serer, the Catholic and monarchist who was one of the founders of the famous Opus Dei and one of the pillars of the Franco regime, he has constituted a "junta of national union" which aspires to govern the country after the Caudillo has left the scene.

Finally in Portugal, the Communist party is already partaking in power through its Secretary General, Alvaro Cunhal, back from a long exile in Prague immediately

All the News That's Fruitful

It was front-page news the other day when Henry Kissinger arrived in Moscow, although at the time he hadn't done anything but arrive, which a lot of other people do every day without getting a line in the papers.

There was nothing surprising about Kissinger's Moscow arrival. The press day's papers had said he was going to Moscow, which wasn't very surprising either, since earlier papers had said he was probably going to Moscow and since, in any case, he goes to Moscow as regularly as other people go to grandmother's for Sunday dinner.

After his arrivals in Moscow, Kissinger generally has "a fruitful exchange of views" with Leonid Brezhnev. The most recent visit was no exception, and in due course after the arrival stories, came the unsurprising stories that he had had "a fruitful exchange of views with Leonid Brezhnev."

We had also been told in advance that he was going to arrange a "summit" meeting between Brezhnev and President Ford. This was not surprising either. The only kind of meeting President Ford goes to anymore is a "summit" meeting. After his "summit" meetings with economists at the White House and with the President of Mexico on the border, anything in the foothills meeting category with Brezhnev would have been unthinkable.

This did not stop the weekend papers from giving front-page display to stories that a Ford-Brezhnev meeting would indeed be held at the "summit."

None of this could pass for news under a strict definition of the term. News would have been a situation in which Kissinger, though headed for Moscow, had arrived at Kabul, had a fruitless exchange of views and arranged a valley meeting between Ford and Brezhnev.

Why all this attention to Kissinger's doing what everyone knew he was going to do? The explanation is that Kissinger, like Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis, is a representative figure of a certain American culture.

He is one of those people about whom one reads in the papers of Americans who read about when there is nothing to read about them. This is not the same group of Americans, obviously, who will pay good money to read that Mrs. Onassis left the yacht at Ischia to take sea one cool day last August.

The two cultures — the Kissinger culture and the Jackie culture — are quite different. Members of the Jackie culture can also tell you the present marital status of Elizabeth Taylor and Richard Burton. Members of the Kissinger culture regard such wisdom as triviality, but they can tell you the names of Talleyrand's mistresses and the last five presidents of Harvard.

To members of the Kissinger culture, the most significant event of the decade would be a breakthrough in the SALT negotiations. The Jackie culture would be equally stirred only by an authenticated U.F.O. sighting, or a message from the other side relayed through a psychic medium in indisputable contact with Rudolph Valentino.

There are many other cultures among Americans, of course. There is the sports culture, to whose members all the foregoing will seem pitiful. This might be called the Muhammad-Namath culture after the two men who never exhaust the sports culturist's capacity to absorb tedium.

As the Kissinger group can read about Moscow arrivals with limpid excitement every time, and as the Jackie group can absorb bulletins about Fifth Avenue strolls without begging for mercy, so the Muhammad-Namath group has the sinister power to dilate until dawn upon the distinction between pulled hamstrings and shoulder separations and how they have whimsically changed the course of human athletic events.

Sociologists could probably catalogue us all into our distinctive cultures by studying the people we are willing to read about on days when there is nothing worth reading about them. There are hordes of people in the country who will read about Johnny Carson's wardrobe, others who cannot slake an appetite for news of Mick Jagger's diet, and others who can sit through the night watching pictures of Hugh Hefner at the Playboy pad.

It is all a question of what you think is important enough to care about when there is nothing going on worth caring about. This is why, to a certain group of people, newspaper editors among them, Henry Kissinger's arrival in Moscow is big news, although it isn't news at all, at least if you are tearing the paper apart in a futile search for bulletins about the latest restatement of Evel Knievel's philosophy or whom Mrs. Onassis saw just before lunch yesterday.

We are not one culture, but many, and unlike Kissinger, we rarely have anything but a fruitless exchange of views.

Women's Libber Has Wrong Enemy

By J. W. MILLER
(A letter to the editor of The Sun)

The confrontation between Jean Tharp and Lornex Mining Corporation over single women's accommodation is being played up as a women's lib thing, and Ms. Tharp is not averse to exploiting that aspect of the situation.

However, with her portrayal of her male co-workers as drunks seeking assault on her defenceless body ("200 drunken miners," "leers," etc.) Ms. Tharp not only does the cause for women's equality serious harm and discredits her co-workers in the eyes of the public, but she bolsters the very arguments Lornex is using against her.

Management has propagandized for years that the working man is little better than an animal, and the fight for betterment of conditions has had to deal with this prejudice. If Ms. Tharp and other women wish to live and work alongside men in isolated conditions they must realize that their adversary is not their male co-workers, but a management ethic which rationalizes everything in dollars and cents.

In Ms. Tharp's case, the issue at hand is not that she must share washroom facilities, but simply that everyone must. Modern mining, logging and construction camps run their single quarters like army barracks. Common washrooms are the unquestioned norm.

The rooms in which single men live lack even a wash basin, and are usually smaller than the average family's bathroom. Try sometime to stuff all your everyday belongings, all your clothes, a writing desk and a bed into your bathroom — and see if you'd like to live there.

If one adds to such conditions the lack of entertainment facilities, the lack of sports and educational programs, no possible chance to fraternize with the opposite sex (unless it's the foreman's wife), and compound the whole desensitizing situation with the same money and less job stability than in town, it is easy to see why camps are having difficulty in attracting crew.

A very big step toward improving conditions and morale in camps would be having women on the work force and living in proper facilities along with the men. The old foreys that are brought up regarding this situation are better suited for Victorian mentalities, for in today's world of lessening sexist prejudice, related problems would be no greater than those that already exist.

If management would supply for their workers' the same amenities (which include separate toilet facilities) that they supply for their supervisory staff, camps would automatically become more attractive to male as well as female workers and their chronic labor shortage would end.

All Ms. Tharp appears to hope for is separate but equally bad accommodation for women, and likely the whole bag of childish relations that accompany such a situation.

In the meantime, I hope that Ms. Tharp will try to understand her male co-workers better. Only then will she find that their problems are basically the same as hers, and that living in a camp full of men is probably safer than walking down her home-town streets.

Our Pioneer Plan pays us Interest Every Month!

... and that's only one of the reasons thousands of men and women over 65 in British Columbia, Alberta and other parts of Canada have joined the Bank of B.C.'s Pioneer Service Plan.

The Bank of B.C.'s Pioneer Service Plan was introduced January 21, 1974. The idea was totally new — a bank plan exclusively for men and women 65 years of age and older. It has all of these outstanding features at NO COST TO YOU.

Inflation Fighter Savings — Like all other banks, Bank of B.C. has a high-yield passbook savings account — interest is paid twice a year and there are no chequing privileges. Unlike other banks, we have made some changes. For the first time in Canadian banking, interest is paid to our Inflation Fighter Savings accounts every month. In addition, the earned interest will be adjusted in January, based on the cost of living increase as published by Statistics Canada. (See graph for details.) The Bank of B.C. will also take care of your cheque writing needs at no charge. (See Chequing below for details.)

It's really good to know that a bank has made a special effort for people our age.

Safety Deposit Box — You are entitled to a 50% reduction on the annual rental of safety deposit box (subject to availability) or equivalent safekeeping services.

Bill Payments — You can pay your telephone, power or fuel bills (where the Bank is able to extend these courtesies), without service charge.

Travelers Cheques — You may purchase travelers cheques for your own use in any available currency, without paying the normal service charge.

Money Orders — Money orders for personal purposes may be purchased in any available currency, without paying a service charge.

Transfers — You may arrange to have money transferred, without charge, between any of your Bank of B.C. accounts.

Deposits — You may make deposits by mail, in person or by 24-hour night depository (where available). When you mail your deposit, the Bank pays postage both ways. The Branch nearest you will keep you supplied with deposit forms and self-addressed envelopes.

Chequing — If you write no more than three (3) cheques a month we will pay these through your Inflation Fighter Savings account. If you write more than three (3) cheques a month, we ask that you open a Personal Chequing account. Cheques personalized with your name will be provided at no cost, and you may write as many cheques as you wish without paying the usual 14¢ per cheque service charge.

Example:
You may open a Pioneer Service Plan with any amount of money, but this example considers $1000 over one year initial interest paid and compounded monthly at 9 1/4% (Interest rate effective August 1, 1974).
Principal	$1000.00
Rate of Interest 9 1/4%	92.50
	$1092.50
Plus additional interest earned when compounded	4.02
	$1096.52
Plus additional interest based on Estimated Annual Cost of Living Increase 10%	$9.63
Total Balance after twelve months	$1106.17
The Bank of B.C.'s Inflation Fighter Savings interest adjustment features can raise your interest to more than 10 1/2%. (Your money is available at all times; there are no lock-in features or penalties)
*Like all other banks, our rates are subject to change without notice.

The Bank of British Columbia is a member of the Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation which insures deposits up to $20,000.

All of these services are part of the Pioneer Service Plan. Bank of B.C. branches in British Columbia and Alberta are continuing to open Pioneer Plan/Inflation Fighter accounts every day.

RECESSION PINCHING JAPAN'S GEISHA GIRLS

TOKYO (UPI) — Japan's economic recession has spread to a new and pretty class of victims.

They are Tokyo's geisha girls and nightclub hostesses, many of whom enjoyed incomes of a million yen ($3,333) or more per month during Japan's recent boom.

Now the weekly news magazine Shukan Bunshun quotes bar owners and the "mamasans" of geisha houses as saying business has fallen to the lowest level since the depression days of the 1930s.

UTAH MINES LTD.

Morton E. Pratt

Utah Mines Ltd. announces the appointment of Morton E. Pratt as Vice-President and General Manager for the Company's operations in British Columbia.

Robert N. Hickman, formerly Assistant Mine Manager, succeeds Mr. Pratt in the position of Mine Manager at the Company's Island Copper Mine at Port Hardy, B.C.

Mr. Pratt, who managed mining operations in the United States and Australia prior to his appointment to Island Copper in 1969, will be based in Vancouver.

Both appointments are effective immediately.

With companies slashing expenses, accounts receivable, fewer big spenders are appearing in the cabarets, and tips are going down. Wealthy men who keep the geishas and night club hostesses as mistresses are short of cash. Many are giving up their girls until times get better, or at least slashing the girls' allowances.

Hostesses in the more expensive bars and night clubs of Ginza and Akasaka are paid wages ranging from $100 down to about $65 a night. They also profit from tips.

In addition, many have regular "arrangements" for sharing an apartment with a wealthy patron for allowances reported to range up to $1,750 a month. The girl usually pays the rent, which takes about 10 per cent of her allowance, the magazine said.

Geisha are traditional Japanese entertainers. Geisha wear kimonos and empty traditional Japanese hair styles. They also play old Japanese musical instruments, and entertain customers with Japanese dances.

By PETER T. KILBORN

NEW YORK (NYT) — The current recession, which many economists, businessmen and labor leaders expect to be the longest and harshest in 30 years, is biting into more and more sectors of the U.S. economy.

The automobile and construction industries, along with Wall Street, have been mired in a slump all year. But now workers are losing jobs in industries that produce such goods as appliances, textiles, television sets, furniture, lumber and semi-conductors. And corporate executives are cutting back their spending for new plants and equipment.

Companies are feeling the pinch in various ways. "Things are very depressed in the textile markets," said Robert S. Small, president of Dan River, Inc., in Danville, Va. "As a matter of fact, they're chaotic. We haven't seen a situation like this since the Second World War."

Small said his plants were shutting down one week a month to avoid excessive inventories. Other leading textile companies have been taking similar action because their customers, the garment makers, and their customers, the retailers, are reducing their orders in fear of a severe downturn in consumer buying.

The downturn has shown up not only in new-car buying but also in such areas as appliances, where unit sales are down 6 per cent from last year's level, and television sets off 10.5 per cent.

As a result some retailers are reducing payrolls. Sears, Roebuck and Co. recently ordered its store managers to cut expenses, resulting in layoffs. And many small retailers, particularly those specializing in men's suits, are trying to increase sales by offering price reductions months ahead of the customary post-Christmas sales.

Even the big capital goods industries, which have been booming all year, companies are beginning to perceive early signs of a slowdown. "We can see a change in direction," said William R. Timken Jr., vice-chairman of the Timken Co., the country's largest producer of ball bearings.

J. T. Bailey, chairman of the Warner and Swasey Co., a leading machine-tool builder, added: "We have had a high order rate, exceeding our ability to produce. It has leveled off, let's say, but it's not yet a dive."

The recession, many economists are saying, began last November though few identified it then and most of a dozen economists interviewed doubted it would end before late next summer. It would therefore run about 20 months, eight more than the slump of 1970-71 and twice as long as any of the other three recessions since the Second World War.

In severity, many economists say, the recession could also exceed the worst of the postwar period, the nine-month slump in 1957 and 1958 when unemployment peaked at 7.5 per cent.

"This could equal the worst recession of the postwar period, and it could exceed it," said Leif Olsen, senior vice president and economist for the First National City Bank of New York.

Albert Sommers, chief economist for the Conference Board, predicted that the unemployment rate would reach 7 per cent early next year and 7.5 per cent in the middle of the year.

Few economists see a rate lower than that and many see a higher one. Pierre Rinfret, an economic consultant who once served as an adviser to the Nixon Administration, predicts a level of 8 to 10 per cent by the end of the year.

PanCanadian

PanCanadian Petroleum Ltd. of Calgary has reported net earnings of $32 million or $1.03 per share for the first nine months of 1974, up from net earnings of $13.5 million or 43 cents per share for the same period last year.

PanCanadian, a Canadian Pacific subsidiary, said in reporting the earnings it did not take into account the effect of the May 6 federal budget proposals.

The company said during the first nine months of this year, it continued to rank as the leading operator of wells drilled in Canada.

Cyprus Anvil

Cyprus Anvil Mining Corp. reports net earnings for the nine months to Sept. 30 of $21,227,000 after providing $10 million for taxes.

That compared with net earnings of $16,071,000 after providing $1.5 million for taxes in the comparable period of 1973.

The company said it paid $3.25 million to the federal government Sept. 30 relating to 1973 Yukon Mining Royalty. It said the amount exceeded the total of all Yukon Mining Royalty payments made by all operators since 1949.

The company reported its long-term debt has been reduced by $13.9 million and said shipments in the third quarter were less than average but expected to be normal in the fourth quarter.

Grouse Mountain

Grouse Mountain Resorts Ltd. reports profit for the year ended May 31 of $192,430 or 12 cents a share in contrast to 1973 losses of $83,238 or five cents a share. Before application of income tax the 1974 operating profit was $471,697.

Gross revenue increased 39 per cent to $3,607,436 from $2,599,844 while operating expenses were down 10 per cent to $2,415,258.

VSE Pace Quickens

VANCOUVER (CP) — Trading activity on the Vancouver Stock Exchange speeded up during October when 31.9 million shares changed hands, up from 23.6 million the previous month. Value of trading rose to $31.4 million from $14.2 million in September.

Contributing to the increased volume in October was extraordinary trading in the shares of Comat Industries Ltd. while a share purchase offer from Canadian Forest Products Ltd. was in effect.

However, the latest month's trading statistics remained well below October 1973 figures, when $1.9 million shares worth $45.5 million changed hands.

Cumulative volume for the first 10 months of this year was $52.2 million, shares down 6.8 per cent from 518.7 million in the corresponding 1973 period. Value of shares traded was off three per cent at $406.6 million compared with $419.5 million in the 1973 10 months.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

A 22-year-old man accused of assaulting two Colwood RCMP officers was remanded Tuesday in provincial court to Thursday when defence witnesses are expected to be called.

The Crown closed its case against Wayne Robert Boldo, of Merritt, charged with assaulting Constables William Biden and Kenneth Rowe July 21.

The charges were laid after a fracas on the Dynsmuir high school ball field, in which Biden received a cut requiring seven stitches.

Constable Rowe, called to the field to assist Biden, testified he remembered seeing Boldo there, but did not know when.

Rowe was unable to link Boldo with any assault upon himself.

Biden had testified Monday that he had to pull Boldo from Rowe.

Crown witness John Phelps, a peace officer at William Head Institution, said he and another officer from there pulled six persons from Biden, who was on the ground. The off-duty institution officers had gone into the ball field after noticing "an RCMP person under a pile of individuals."

The court was told Monday Biden had entered the ball field after seeing some of the 40 persons on the field drinking.

Pushing started after Biden took a bottle of beer from a youth.

After prosecutor John Robbins closed the Crown's case, defence counsel Michael Hutchison presented a no-evidence motion, which was rejected by Judge Harold Alder.

Hutchison said there was no evidence to show Boldo had intentionally come in contact with Rowe.

"He could well have been knocked into Rowe," Hutchison said.

Meanwhile, two charges against another man were remanded to today to fix a new trial date.

Alder accepted a suggestion from lawyer Peter Freeman that he should disqualify himself from hearing the case of his client, David Andrew Heslop, 18, of 1321 Sussex, charged with obstructing Rowe and resisting arrest by Rowe.

Freeman said the field of evidence from the Boldo case will "substantially overlap" evidence in Heslop's case.

But Alder did not disqualify himself from presiding at the preliminary hearing into a charge of escape against Heslop. The hearing was reset for Nov. 19.

A 22-year-old man who was on probation received a 30-day jail sentence for stealing $34 worth of goods Monday from Woodward's, 3125 Douglas.

Ian Douglas Perry, 1024 McClure, placed on a year's probation in June for a break-in, pleaded guilty.

He stole seven doorknobs, 26 choker necklaces, three electric plugs and seven light-bulbs.

The court was told Perry planned to sell them.

Arthur Spelman, 22, address not known, received a one-month jail term for assault causing bodily harm Sept. 27 in the Bastion Inn.

Spelman earlier pleaded guilty to the charge, laid after a man was cut with a beer glass.

Eight stitches were required to close a cut in the hand of the man he assaulted.

Ostler noted that Spelman had a number of criminal convictions, but his record was not read.

Bail was set at $2,000 for Danny Benford, 22, of 908 Arcadia, and at $1,000 for Richard Brown, 22, of 313 Montreal, both of whom were charged with trafficking in marijuana Oct. 20.

Information supplied to the court at the bail hearing by prosecutor Bruce McConnan and lawyer Gordon Detwiller was banned from publication by Judge William Ostler.

The two men were remanded to Friday for election of trial method.

Edward Hand, 30, of 908 Arcadia, and Marlene Laird, 27, of the same address, were each released from custody in their own recognizance in the sum of $2,000 after being charged with possession of LSD for the purpose of trafficking.

They were remanded to Nov. 12 for election of trial method.

In other drug cases, Stephen Charles Donaldson, 22, off 422 Craigflower, and Terrence Izzard, 32, of 1011 Wychbury, were each fined $75 for possessing marijuana.

Two persons were sentenced for impaired driving: Gerald Richard Venn, 41, of 711 Jasmine, was fined $375 and banned from driving for 40 days, and John Terrance Demchuk, 21, of 836 Esquimalt, was fined $350 and banned from driving 30 days.

Esso Tower 'Stucco Modern' 1934 World Fair Vintage

Everybody knows—but not everybody loves—that 80-foot tower atop the Imperial Oil gas station on the Causeway.

It has stood there for 43 years and Ald. Sam Bawlf says the example of "Art Deco" should be preserved, as should the garage building itself.

But architect R. W. Siddall, a member of the city's design panel, describes the tower as "1931 Chicago World Fair—'stucco modern.'"

"It is undoubtedly an example of a period of commercial design in North America," he said today. "But as far as I'm concerned it has no place being preserved on the Inner Harbor of Victoria."

Bawlf says the tower should be saved and the former aviation beacon on top of it reactivated, to commemorate the role aviation has played in B.C.'s history.

In addition, he told city council's caucus meeting Tuesday, the garage building itself is worth preserving because it is a reminder of a distinctive Eastern American style of architecture of the 1920s and 1930s.

Bawlf suggested the garage's former Mexican-style roof be restored and the building converted to house the tourist information bureau, when the garage site becomes public property early next year.

(It was bought by the city and subsequently turned over to the provincial government).

Architect D. H. Hambleton, chairman of the design panel, a special advisory committee to council, said today he agrees with Bawlf on the merit of the tower but he can't comment on the value of the building without more study.

Of the tower he said: "It does have quite a distinctive style of that era. It's a part of the Victoria scene and I'd like to see it stay."

Jack Cook, manager of Causeway Esso on which the concrete pinnacle is perched, has worked at the service station for 20 years. He said today nobody thinks the tower is ugly in fact many tourists and locals alike stop to give favorable comment.

"They think it's quite a landmark—something unique," said Cook. "But they ask why we don't turn the revolving beacon on."

"It has been disconnected since the blackout before the Second World War and hasn't been lit up again because the air traffic is heavier."

The 10 million candlepower beacon was visible 60 miles away, and was used as a navigation aid to float planes using harbor waters.

Art Deco? A report handed out by Bawlf, written by architectural historian Martin Segger, defined it as an attempt to "reconcile the arts and industry through the use of symmetry and geometrical forms adapted from many sources."

Council will continue to discuss the matter.

A recent change of policy in operating McPherson Playhouse box office has developed a slow burn among habitual renters of the city-owned facility and many of its patrons.

Time was — just three weeks ago — when a citizen could pick up the phone and make his reservations in advance for a McPherson event. Now he is told that reservations are only made for out-of-town callers.

The edict from Jack Morgan's office was dumped without warning in the middle of the week. Bastion Theatre was producing The Four Poster. Reason provided upon protest by Bastion, was that too many people were wasting the box office attendant's time in making reservations and then failing to pick them up.

But Bastion's Helen Simpson-Baikle and Vincent Dupuis and Victoria Operatic Society president Peter Chipman see the policy change as a failure to provide full-services for which the city charges five per cent of gross ticket sales over and above the normal rental charge.

"The un-picked-up tickets are our own business; it's on our shoulders," says Chipman.

And Dupuis points out that the box office only stands to lose 25 cents on unclaimed reservations. "While we lose the whole $5 or $5.50 it's our own look-out if we want to take that risk."

Both organizations, with shows upcoming at the McPherson, report keen annoyance from patrons faced with the new policy.

The Canadian National Railway is missing out on considerable business by poor scheduling of its train service between western and eastern Canada, according to visiting English author Roy Clark.

"Both ways the CNR goes through the Rockies in the dark. I'm going back CPR," Clark says. "Who wants to see the Rockies by moonlight?"

For four years Greater Victoria school board trustee Walter Donald has been asking why the board can't start printing information on both sides of its sheets of paper.

For four years he's been told it would cost the board more in man-hours to turn the paper over and print on both sides than it does to pay for extra paper.

Donald asked again Tuesday night.

He said he's been told paper prices are going up to 25 per cent every three months for the next year, so maybe spending the man-hours will become the cheaper method.

Colin Glover, head of business for the school board, promised to investigate costs again.

Taxi Thief Sought By Police

A young man went for a free ride in a taxi early today and police are searching for him.

City police said today Blue Bird taxi company told them at 1:48 a.m. one of their taxis at Douglas at Broughton had been stolen.

Saanich police spotted the cab four minutes later and started chasing it on the Island Highway.

The cab was abandoned by the man, believed about 20, at a driveway at 119 Helmcken.

A taxi driver, Don Waddell, retrieved the undamaged vehicle.

Budget in Red If Early Snow

Guardians of the public purse at City Hall are keeping their fingers crossed that no vicious snow storms will hit the city this side of Christmas.

Because if that happens, the city's budget will dip into the red.

The finance committee was warned today that only about $11,500 remains in the contingencies fund for miscellaneous spending, and advised to use that only for "strictly true contingencies."

"One heavy snow storm could deplete this account in short order," said comptroller-treasurer Mason Sheldrick in a report.

At the start of this year the fund was a whopping $618,589, but the city has had to fall back on it for a number of unbudgeted items, including $206,800 police department salary increases, $180,950 for fire department personnel and $55,750 for increases to department heads and non-union staff.

By mid-October the fund was still looking fairly healthy at more than $89,000, but then came a demand for $64,800 as the city's share of a $100 million costs overrun by the provincial human resources department.

And since that time, council has decided to spend $13,000 on repairs and improvements to Roslyn, the heritage home on the Warren Tug property recently acquired by Victoria.

Saanich public works mechanic Bruce Smith surveys damaged cruiser

Crashes Deplete Fleet

Two Saanich police cars demolished in accidents in recent months have left the force's fleet strength reduced by 10 per cent.

And deputy chief Eric Avison said today the force will likely have to just "struggle by" until replacements are purchased.

He said the force was "considering the possibility" of a lend-lease car to replace, on an interim measure, the detective vehicle heavily damaged in an accident in Esquimalt last Saturday.

"But," he added, "we are limited in what we can do."

He said the cruiser involved in a two-car crash Sept. 2 at Tillamook and the Island Highway was a "front line car" and couldn't be replaced by a lend-lease substitute.

The department is ordering a replacement and hopes to have delivery by Dec. 31.

Avison said damage to police cars would "probably be higher than last year" but was unable to say how much. He said the incidence of accidents was "very low" but a predictable occurrence "in view of the number of miles we put on the cars and the type of work we are involved in."

The force has 20 cars working around the clock and recording "several hundred thousands miles" each year, Avison said.

Spot Zoning Protest From Cadboro Bay

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

Opposition to Saanich council's spot zoning tactics and demands for an over-all community plan for the municipality were voiced by members of the Cadboro Bay Ratepayers' Association Tuesday night.

More than 150 people crowded Cadboro Bay United Church facilities to register their criticism.

Focal point of the opposition was council's recent decision to permit D'Arcy Bridgman of 2600 McDonald to subdivide his property, although the two lots formed would then be less than the one-half acre minimum now required.

Council decided Monday to allow Bridgman to go ahead, providing a study by municipal planner Tom Loney found it feasible.

To allow Bridgman to subdivide, council has decided it will be necessary to rezone the whole McDonald area. The CBRA will send a letter to council, asking that no such rezoning be permitted.

Spokesman Nancy Cox said today:

"None of us want any subdivision when we're so close to getting some over-all plan. We've worked for this (the plan) for many years. It's been a hard, flogging business — nobody would listen."

(Ald. Mel Couveller, chairman of the lands, planning and housing committee, is advocating a community plan for Saanich be adopted as soon as possible to ease residents' fears that their neighborhoods will be peppered with rezoning applications.)

Mrs. Cox said council had forgotten, in making its plans to lower the one-half acre requirement in the McDonald area, that this ruling had been made necessary by "the lay of the land, the road breaking up and the swamps on either side."

Plans for small units of cluster housing in the Cadboro Bay area that would allow elderly residents to stay in their community once they were unable to keep up larger homes were also discussed at the meeting.

These were outlined by Walter Barss and Norman Worsley of the church's committee.

"These could be built under a land-use contract development plan," Mrs. Cox said. "In small numbers in allocated areas, such as behind the church or in the village area where the people would have easy access to shops."

She said the church committee wanted "some control over what is built in the area."

Vic West Plan For Big Centre Has Skeptics

Two city aldermen expressed doubts Tuesday whether Victoria West, with a population of about 3,000 people, needs a spacious community centre costing close to $1 million.

The item was one of nine proposals advanced by the Victoria West Community Association for spending the area's share of $2 million in Neighborhood Improvement Program funds allotted to Victoria West and James Bay.

Housing committee chairman Ald. Percy Frampton, who is responsible for steering the N.I.P. proposals through council, said a centre of the size envisaged is "a pretty generous idea" for a community of 3,000.

He also had doubts about the community association's suggestion that the building include 6,000 square feet of office rental space, revenue from which would underwrite the activity centre's operating costs.

Frampton questioned whether that would constitute proper use of N.I.P. funds.

Ald. Sam Bawlf pointed out that the community centre proposed for James Bay's much larger population would cost only about half the price of the Vic West facility.

Total figure of the Vic West community's draft shopping list was more than $14 million, city council's caucus session learned.

The list included $152,000 for improvements to three parks: Banfield, Victoria West and Barnard; $90,000 for a lawn bowling clubhouse; $72,000 for improvements to Wilson Street between Dalton and Mary; $30,000 for a proposed mall at the Russell-Craig flower intersection (achieved through street closure); and $45,000 for three sets of traffic control lights at busy intersections.

City planning director Geoff Greenhalgh said alternatives to the association's plan for a community centre would be to construct a smaller building for $540,000 or acquire and renovate an existing structure for $350,000.

Lake's Swans Mute

The trumpeters turned into mutes.

Nobody knows how. The trumpeters are not the usual brass-blasting variety but trumpeter swans that once roiled the reaches of Beaver-Elk Lake.

Now they've disappeared and a flock of mute swans has taken their place — multiplying to 63 when last checked in mid-September.

The switch in swans came to light Tuesday at a meeting of Saanich's parks and recreation committee.

Ald. Bill Campbell recalled seeing trumpeter swans on the lake years ago, some of them black, but parks administrator Frank Andrews said as long as his department had been monitoring the swan population only mute swans had been sighted.

The committee agreed, because of "the number of swans and their habit of proliferation" to allow the Broomhill Golf Club at Sooke to have a pair for the club's bird sanctuary.

The club, which has taken out the necessary permits, will cover the cost of transportation.

It will also pay for a veterinarian to remove the birds' pinion feathers so they are unable to fly back to their original locale.

Cats Show No Gratitude to Bruins

GUMP WORSLEY
... praise for Cougars

By ERNIE FEDORUK
Times Staff

New Westminster Bruins acquired "future consideration" but the Western Canada Hockey League team might have been better off "Tuesday by insisting on 'immediate consideration' from the Victoria Cougars.

But welfare wasn't part of the deal.

Consequently, the Cougars acquired a player and then displayed ingratitude by manhandling the Bruins 12-4 at Memorial Arena. Victoria's display of power was such that Bruins' coach Ernie McLean left his team after two periods of play.

Upset with Gord McMorran's officiating and his team's defensive inadequacies, McLean turned the Bruins over to assistant Doug Sauter and viewed the final period from the stands along with 2,802 customers.

If his walkout was intended to goad the Bruins into respectability, it didn't work. Stung for six straight goals after leading 4-2 in the second period, the Bruins conceded four more unanswered goals in the final 20 minutes.

That helped the Cougars equal a club scoring record as well as stretch their first-place margin in the Western Division to seven points.

In addition to the points, the Cougars also acquired left winger Eric Sanderson from the Bruins on Tuesday. He was obtained, said Victoria coach Pat Ginnell, for "future consideration."

The six-foot-four, 220-pound winger scored eight goals and 16 assists in 32 games with the Bruins last season. He is scheduled to join the Cougars today and is expected to be in the lineup Saturday when Flin Flon Bombers visit Victoria.

A shorthanded goal, scored by Peter Morris and set up brilliantly by Mel Bridgman, got the Cougars untracked for their big scoring breakout.

Bridgman's effort early in the second period caught the eye of Lorne (Gump) Worsley, Minnesota North Stars scout and one of five talent-hunters in the audience.

"That turned the game right around," said Worsley, who singled out Bridgman and defenceman Rick LaPointe as "two who are as good as any other players I've seen this year."

Bridgman wound up his night's work with three goals and four assists to run his league-leading point total to 47 while Morris, also a stand-out, scored two and set up two to move into third place in the scoring race with 34 points.

LaPointe also scored twice and picked up two assists while Tim Williams, Jim Gustafson, Al Hill, Rick Martin and Don Cairns shared Victoria's other goals.

Mark Lofthouse, Bruins' outstanding 17-year-old right winger, scored two for Westminster while Steve Clippin-dale and Brad Maxwell added the singles.

McMorran whistled out 69 minutes in penalties, with 10 majors contributing the bulk of the total.

McMorran came in for criticism by McLean for not calling a penalty on Victoria defenceman Kim Clackson following a play that resulted in an injury to Harold Phillipoff of the Bruins.

Clackson bodied Phillipoff against the boards early in the third period. Phillipoff suffered a cut on the head and a concussion.

Worsley, was sitting in the stands in the immediate vicinity, thought Clackson's check "was a fair hit. From the way he went into the boards, the damage was done by the New Westminster player's own helmet."

The injury to the rugged Phillipoff compounded New Westminster's manpower problems.

Because of a one-game suspension imposed on Captain Clayton Pachal and a hand injury to Barry Beck, the Bruins started the game without two of their best defencemen.

It was a solid effort that routed not only McLean but also New Westminster goalie Gord Laxton. Heading into the game with a 3.31 goals-against average (second best in the league), Laxton was touched for nine goals before giving way to rookie Kerry Besbitt at the 2:42 mark of the third period.

Roberts: Okay, Why Can't He Play Here?

When you get right down to it, it's possible that the Western Canada Hockey League won't back the Victoria Cougars in the Gordie Roberts case because it is operating out of fear — fear that it will step on somebody's else's toes and will upset the hockey apocryphal across the country.

There's a bond of faith that must be observed — to hell with the ideals.

That basically is what the Roberts case is all about. The Cougars have him. Sudbury of the Ontario Hockey Association has a prior Canadian claim for him. He can play in the U.S. where he craves from (Detroit) if he wishes. He wants to play here, has permission from his former club to do so; but he isn't allowed to because the CAHA won't let him. He is Sudbury property.

So there's a stalemate. This is old hat in junior hockey — telling a player where he may play; and it goes back to midwest hockey and player lists. Oh, there aren't any of the old "forms around" which more or less bound a player to a club for life, and if a player defied that edict then he was virtually blackballed for all time.

Now everything is more modern. He is allowed to make his own future, well almost. He is allowed to be drafted when the junior career is over and he can pick and choose between the two major leagues, the National Hockey League and the World Hockey Association.

Why Not Some Support?

Before that of course, he was the property of the club to which he was beholden or to which had put a claim for his services. Such is the case of Roberts. Sudbury put his name on their "protected list" which means in effect that he can't play hockey for any other junior club in Canada unless he is cleared by Sudbury. Meanwhile, Roberts has permission from his former team in Detroit to play for Victoria. No way says Sudbury, and the CAHA is duty bound to honor Sudbury's position and enforce the decision, legal or not.

And without going into all the ramifications of junior hockey players' contracts, reserve clauses, etc., it must be obvious that a majority of WCHL directors don't want to be forced to go on record as favoring a request to the OHA to allow Roberts to play here. Otherwise, the issue would have been settled long since. In other words, why rock the boat?

Sure, it's a mess, and so is hockey at times, especially amateur hockey. You play by their rules and you'll usually get treated fairly. You don't and you'll be on the outside wondering what happened to all the moralities your parents told you about.

Anyone who's ever been involved in the middle of any amateur sports controversy and tried to help sort it out to the benefit of all involved will tell you that the chances of getting an unbiased report are non-existent. The same goes for hockey.

Only Asking to Play

What you ask for and what you get are usually totally different things such as half truths, outright lies, or the CAHA won't move too hastily on a matter of policy because once it makes a decision it has set a precedent for the future. And if one player (i.e. Roberts) is allowed to play while being on another's team list, there wouldn't be any use having a list at all, would there?

The Cougars, it has been reported, have tried to make a deal for Roberts with the OHA, which is the usual procedure, but no deal. So the case is still in limbo and headed for court.

Meanwhile, Roberts sits in Victoria, in the stands, while his Cougar mates go about leading the western division of the WCHL, and nobody outside Victoria really seems to care if he just continues to sit.

On the surface and even underneath — providing all the local facts are true and the complete story told — it certainly appears as some sort of a violation of human rights, depending on the law in such matters, of course. And it is a fact that Roberts is being prevented from following his chosen career where he chooses.

It has even been suggested that Kathleen Ruff take it in hand as she did the infamous woman-in-the-press-box case during the Canadian softball championship. If that was a nothing and a poney, this is for real.

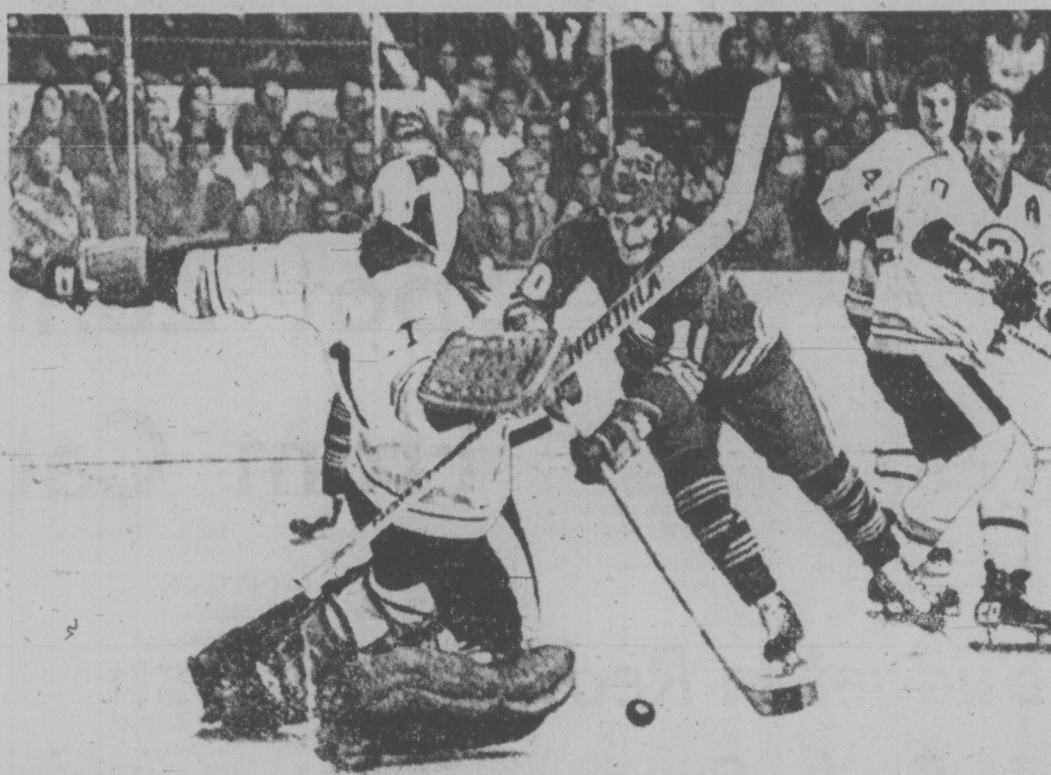

And actually, Roberts is not asking for much. All he wants to do is to play.

Which is fine, why shouldn't he? But it should also be explained that thousands of Canadian kids all over the country are on similar protected lists, the same as Roberts; and when it comes their turn, will they be allowed the same privileges being asked for Roberts?

I doubt it. But that's part of hockey too, and the other half of what this fuss is all about.

Tough Approach Not Paying

By The Canadian Press

The tough approach doesn't do much for Philadelphia Flyers any more.

The Flyers won the Stanley Cup last season with a hard-checking, sometimes brawling style of play.

Continuing the same style in the 1974-75 National Hockey League season, the Flyers got into their second brawl in less than two weeks Tuesday night.

This time, the Flyers' Bobby Clarke and Garry Howatt of New York Islanders squared off in the third period at Uniondale, N.Y. That started a bench-clearing melee which ended with five players sent to the penalty box with 1:13 remaining in the game. The Flyers were leading 4-3 at the time but, with 34 seconds remaining, Billy Harris of the Islanders scored to give New York a 4-4 tie.

In other NHL action Tuesday, Vancouver Canucks beat New York Rangers 2-1, Los Angeles Kings defeated St. Louis Blues 4-3, Pittsburgh Penguins beat Kansas City Scouts 5-3, and Boston Bruins tied Buffalo Sabres 2-2.

The Flyers first major brawl of the season Oct. 25 at California resulted in record 232 penalty minutes by both teams. Philadelphia lost that game 4-1 to the Seals and two Flyers — Don Saleski and Bob Kelly — were given six-game suspensions.

Tuesday's game ended with a total of 99 minutes in penalties. Clarke, Howatt, the Flyers' Andre Dupont and Bernie Parent and New York goalie Billy Smith took penalties in the major fight which started in front of the Philadelphia net.

The Flyers lost Gary Dornhoefer in the first period when he hit his head on the ice after colliding with a teammate. He was taken to hospital with a suspected fractured cheek bone.

At Boston, Johnny Bucyk's goal late in the third period gave the Bruins the tie after Hughes each scored twice to lead Houston in its home victory which gave the Aeros sole possession of the Western Division lead.

Gordie Howe added a goal and two assists for the Aeros who now lead their division with a 6-4 record.

The game between the two expansion clubs drew a crowd of 5,017 at Indianapolis.

By The Canadian Press

The three Jets combined for eight points, including four goals, Tuesday night as Winnipeg downed Minnesota Fighting Saints 6-4.

The line has collected 34 points in the last four games including 15 goals—nine of them by Hull.

In other games, Toronto Toros stayed in a tie with Winnipeg for the Canadian Division lead by beating Michigan Stags 5-2, Houston Aeros whipped San Diego Mariners 9-3, Phoenix Roadrunners blanked Indianapolis Racers 4-0 and Vancouver Blazers edged Chicago Cougars 5-4.

Nilsson and Chris Bordeleau scored twice Tuesday and Hedberg and Hull added singles.

The Jets took a 5-2 lead early in the third period. Goals by Mike Walton and George Morrison narrowed the Jets' lead but Hull added his 11th goal of the season midway in the final period.

At Detroit, the Stags' attendance improved to 3,965 from less than 2,000 at their last home game, but the crowd was disappointed as Pat Hickey led the Toros with two goals and an assist.

The Stags, last in the Western Division, lost their fourth game in a row and their eight in the last nine games. The Toros ended a four-game losing streak.

Vancouver improved its record to 4-4 on the strength of rookie Larry Israelson's first WHA goal midway in the third period at Chicago.

Jim Sherritt and Frank Hughes each scored twice to lead Houston in its home victory which gave the Aeros sole possession of the Western Division lead.

Gordie Howe added a goal and two assists for the Aeros who now lead their division with a 6-4 record.

The game between the two expansion clubs drew a crowd of 5,017 at Indianapolis.

A meeting last weekend in Kitchener, attended by Chynoweth and OHA president Tubby Schmaltz of Walkerton, Ont., failed to resolve the issue and an emergency meeting of OHA Major Junior "A" club operators Tuesday in Ottawa also ended in a deadlock.

On Monday, meanwhile, Roberts' father began legal action against the CAHA to get his son's transfer. He also swore out an application for an injunction that would allow Gordie to play for Victoria while the issue is resolved, either in or out of court.

The injunction was served on the CAHA Tuesday and that body has today and Thursday to try to settle the problem. Failing that, the injunction will be heard in a Toronto court Friday and Ginnell has been told by Cougar lawyer Ellis Achem he may have an answer by 11 a.m. Victoria time.

The Ottawa law firm of Gowing and Henderson is acting as agent for Achem in representing the Roberts family in the east.

Roberts knew he had been drafted by Sudbury last June and, according to Ginnell, visited that city during the summer.

"But they (Gordie and his father) told me they never gave Sudbury any indication he'd play there," Ginnell added.

Ginnell invited Roberts to Cougars' training camp. He brought Gordie and his parents to Victoria last August for a first-hand look at the city and the Cougar operation.

GORDIE ROBERTS:

'Penalized Because Of Politics'

By JIM CRERAR
Times Staff

Why can't a 17-year-old play hockey where he wants?

Gordie Roberts, a rookie defenceman with Victoria Cougars, would like to know. So would his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Sandy Roberts of Detroit.

They'd also like to know why Bill Burke, president of the Sudbury Wolves of the Ontario Hockey Association Junior "A" major series, is able to prevent their son from playing. They're ready to go to court to get the answer.

Gordie Roberts is on the sidelines because the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association has held up the transfer form he needs to move from Detroit Junior Red Wings, the club for which he played last season.

Roberts is a U.S. citizen, but in playing for the Junior Wings, his card was filed with the CAHA through the Ontario Hockey Association, a member branch. The Detroit club is in the Southern Ontario league, an OHA Junior "A" tier two circuit.

But it's not Detroit that's holding Roberts up. Pat Ginnell, owner-coach of the Cougars, has his release from Tom Wilson, the Junior Wings' manager. Ginnell put Roberts on Cougars' protected list last Jan. 28 and made a deal with Detroit for him.

In June, however, the Wolves placed Roberts' name on their list when OHA junior clubs conducted their annual draft of graduating midlevel (16-year-old) players.

Burke has refused to remove Roberts' name from the Sudbury list, prompting the CAHA to hold up the transfer. On Oct. 22 Ed Chynoweth of Saskatoon, president of the Western Canada Hockey League, ordered Roberts not to play for Victoria until his transfer was cleared.

A meeting last weekend in Kitchener, attended by Chynoweth and OHA president Tubby Schmaltz of Walkerton, Ont., failed to resolve the issue and an emergency meeting of OHA Major Junior "A" club operators Tuesday in Ottawa also ended in a deadlock.

On Monday, meanwhile, Roberts' father began legal action against the CAHA to get his son's transfer. He also swore out an application for an injunction that would allow Gordie to play for Victoria while the issue is resolved, either in or out of court.

The injunction was served on the CAHA Tuesday and that body has today and Thursday to try to settle the problem. Failing that, the injunction will be heard in a Toronto court Friday and Ginnell has been told by Cougar lawyer Ellis Achem he may have an answer by 11 a.m. Victoria time.

Roberts knew he had been drafted by Sudbury last June and, according to Ginnell, visited that city during the summer.

"But they (Gordie and his father) told me they never gave Sudbury any indication he'd play there," Ginnell added.

Ginnell invited Roberts to Cougars' training camp. He brought Gordie and his parents to Victoria last August for a first-hand look at the city and the Cougar operation.

"The Roberts family chose

Victoria and Gordie, an excellent rusher, turned in several outstanding games for the Cougars prior to his enforced layoff.

He's continuing to work out with the team and is attending high school. He's in Grade 12.

Ginnell has made several cash offers to Sudbury for Roberts' transfer, including all the legal fees he expects to pay on the player's behalf. He said Tuesday it could amount to $3,000, but the Wolves have refused.

Roberts, meanwhile, has told Ginnell he will not play for Sudbury under any circumstances. If he can't play here, he'll return to Detroit and try out for the U.S. national team, which wants him.

While similar cases have gone to court before, circumstances have varied to the point where there seems to be no firm precedent.

Most hockey operators, including Ginnell, do not regard "protected" and draft lists of young players as legally binding. They constitute, at best, a gentleman's agreement among the clubs.

"I'd give any boy who didn't want to play for me his release because I'd have no hold on him," Ginnell said.

"In cases like this, a club normally tries to make a deal for the boy."

"It's ridiculous. He's missed close to three weeks. The boy came here to play hockey. He should have been allowed to play while discussions were going on. He's being penalized because of politics."

Bob Rogerson dumps coho into holding pen

Incubation and Feeding Could Bring Back Coho

Amalgamated Conservation Society members, who have been attempting to bolster natural salmon production in two lower Vancouver Island streams through summer fry-feeding projects in recent years, have now taken the next logical step toward rebuilding the runs of yesteryear.

The ACS, made up of representatives from various sportsmen's clubs as well as the Pacific Trollers' Association, has started small hatchery operations for coho on both Goldstream and Mary Vine Creek, a tributary of the Sooke River.

Two incubation boxes, each capable of producing in the order of 50,000 fry, have been placed beside the two rivers in isolated spots, to reduce the possibility of vandalism.

Despite running into a few "bugs" in the process, which will be easy to iron out, ACS members netted, tranquilized and transported nine coho to a holding area in the Goldstream last Sunday. Further netting operations are planned for Thursday and possibly this coming Sunday.

The fish will be held in special pens until ripe and then stripped of eggs and milt. After fertilization, the eggs will be placed in eight layers deep in the boxes, with gravel between each layer.

Water flows in at the bottom of the box and percolates up through the layers, providing the developing eggs with a good supply of oxygen and washing away waste materials.

Amalgamated members hope to strip a maximum of 40 fish in Goldstream or roughly one-third of the run.

Breeding stock for the Mary Vine box will be taken from De Mamiel Creek.

Biologists from federal fisheries will be on hand to supervise and advise on each step of the hatching and rearing process.

Carried out under a $1,600 grant from the provincial recreation and conservation branch, the project has also received excellent co-operation from the Greater Victoria water board.

Incubation boxes are a relatively new idea and the only project currently working is a 500,000-fry box operated by federal fisheries on Blaney Creek in the Fraser River system.

Two main benefits are derived from this artificial spawning system — protection from flooding and a higher survival rate for fry.

With boxes, fry survival rates are around 80 or 90 per cent compared to a maximum of 20 per cent under natural conditions. If bad floods occur during the spring, the natural survival rate can fall under 10 per cent.

OFFICIALS MUM ON WIMBLEDON BOYCOTT THREAT

LONDON (AP) — The all-England Tennis Club was non-committal Tuesday in the face of a threat by top women players to boycott the Wimbledon tournament.

Club secretary David Mills said a letter had been received from Billie Jean King, president of the Women's International Tennis Association, WITA demanding the same prize money as the men.

Mills said the all-England committee now is considering prize money for 1975, he added: "Of course, Wimbledon will still go on, whatever decision the women's association might take."

Julie Heldman of the United States has been reported as saying the association "means business" and will not play at Wimbledon next year unless it gets what it wants.

Last year, Jimmy Connors won the men's singles title at Wimbledon and received $24,000. Chris Evert, the women's champion, earned $17,000.

stewart lang

When the fry hatch, they will be trapped below the outfall of the incubation boxes. Goldstream fry will then be transferred throughout the system and Mary Vine fry will be placed above the falls in the Sooke River. A large stretch of ideal rearing water in the Sooke, currently out of-reach for spawners because of the falls, will thus be utilized.

Any problems such as overcrowding and competition for food, which would naturally follow introduction of large numbers of additional fry into a stream, will probably be mitigated entirely by extending ACS fry-feeding activities.

Only 26 coho showed up in Goldstream last year — and this stream used to be fairly productive.

However, the ACS believes the return this year will be greater. It is the year for the first returns of coho which were given a head-start through fry-feeding.

Early indications, such as the sport catch of coho in Saanich Inlet, point to a good run.

And the next couple of weeks should tell the tale.

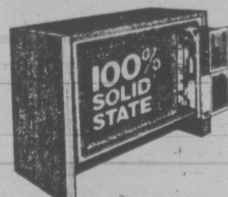

Co-operation between the various government agencies, sportsmen's groups and commercial troller fishermen has made this project possible. Perhaps it wouldn't be asking too much for the commercial netters to lend a helping hand as well. They'll eventually benefit from it.

Meanwhile, we'll all have to wait another three years to find out whether or not the combination of artificial hatching and fry-feeding can bring back the runs of coho which have been decimated through negligence.

Easy on Those Oars, Fellas, Or It's Fours Without Boat

SCHOLASTIC SCENE

By Jim Crerar

Row, row, row your boat gently up the stream — especially if you're on the University of Victoria's four-oared crew.

The UVic male rowers have relied heavily on a pair of coxed four-man shells donated eight years ago by H.B. Elworthy of Victoria. They've had excellent use but are now worn to the point where any kind of rough handling could send them to the bottom with all hands.

"Both of them have gone over submerged stumps out at Elk Lake where we train," explained UVic men's rowing coach Doug White. "It's put long gashes in each shell. Two weeks ago we tore the bottom out of one of them."

Replacing them with new shells is out of the question. The cost is $3,000 each and the rowers simply don't have that kind of money. They're busy planning, raffish, dances and bottle drives just to make enough to get to a few regattas this year.

"Normally, we'd send them back to the manufacturer in Seattle and he'd put in new wood panels," White said, "but he's so busy making new shells he doesn't have time to repair them."

So that means the rowers are faced with a do-it-yourself project in drydock.

"I've been doing some repairs for the last couple of years," White said, "but none of us really knows much about it. We're going to try to glue the shells back together and avoid using fiberglass as much as possible."

Fiberglass adds weight, of course, and the shells are giving the rowers enough trouble as it is. "Even with glueing," said White, "the shape of the hulls is sprung and they'll never be the same."

Neither will the eight-man crews if things don't improve. As it stands, UVic is on the verge of becoming history's first seven-oared crew, with or without coxswain.

"We don't have a complete set of eight oars," White revealed. "We're using oars we borrowed from the Victoria City Rowing Club that have been lengthened to suit the university crews. One of them is broken."

Does this mean one man gets a free ride, or do they just give him a paddle?

"Neither," White replied. "He uses a blade given to us by Brentwood College as a replacement for the broken one."

Despite the handicaps, White is enthusiastic about this year's lightweight eight at UVic, or lightweight seven if you prefer.

"I'm looking forward to a tremendous showing from them," he said. "They're going as well now as they were at the end of last season," the high point of which was a fifth-place finish in the Head-of-the-Lakes regatta in Seattle.

White has six returnees — stroke Allan Halverson, Gary Weikum, John Alexander, Brian Hislop, Brian Clark and Tim Tuttle. Alexander finished fifth last August in the Canadian lightweight single sculls at Burnaby Lake.

The newcomers include and Richard Fife, all of Victoria. At least two of them will crack the starting lineup — if there are enough oars to go around.

The rowing team's main aim is the Western Inter-collegiate Sprint Championships at Long Beach, Calif., next May.

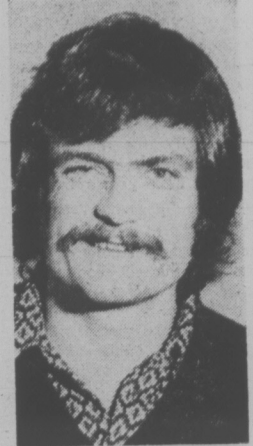

"We're not sure we can afford to go, but the guys are trying to raise the money," White said.

Meanwhile, the Head-of-the-Lakes regatta comes up again Nov. 17 and White is trying to arrange competitions with Shawnigan, Brentwood and University of British Columbia as well as a match race against Western Washington University here in March.

This is White's first full season as men's rowing coach at UVic. He took over midway through last season when Laurie West moved to Vancouver. White, 26, has been a competitive rower since 1969.

He spent three years on the UVic team and now is with Victoria City, mostly in coxed fours but also in eights and, for the first time this year, single sculls.

White joins Wayne van Oosterhout, women's rowing coach who masterminded UVic to a near-victory in last year's Canadian championships at Burnaby Lake.

Hunting Ban Urged in U.S.

NEW YORK — A suit brought by the Fund For Animals and Wildlife Preserves has resulted in a federal court order for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to re-examine and justify the hunting of ducks and geese prior to the start of next year's hunting season.

The suit had sought to close the current duck hunting seasons in the 48 continental states and Alaska because federal regulations permitted the use of lead shot, the hunting of black ducks and allowed shooting before sunrise.

In an agreement signed by federal judge Frederick Lacey in Newark, the government agreed to submit an environmental impact statement on waterfowl hunting before issuing federal hunting regulations for the 1975-76 seasons.

The suit marked the first time that groups opposed to hunting had attempted to halt a hunting activity on a nationwide basis. Such groups have previously opposed hunting in court actions in far narrower areas. Wildlife Preserves, for example, was successful in opposing a special deer hunt planned for last year in the Great Swamp National Wildlife Refuge in Morris County, N.J.

Although the court permitted duck hunting seasons to go on as scheduled this year, the suit was seen as a forerunner to statewide actions opposing open seasons on other species of game.

The Fish and Wildlife Service, in a draft environmental impact statement issued last month, proposed a ban on the use of lead shot in waterfowl hunting because spent lead shot, when ingested by ducks feeding on the bottoms of ponds, can result in lead poisoning and significant losses of waterfowl — including species that are not subject to hunting.

There are compelling arguments on both sides of this question but the service has long argued that the use of lead shot and the inevitable poisoning of some birds makes hunters especially vulnerable to the challenges of anti-hunting organizations.

In modern guns, steel shot has been found not to be harmful to barrels but its killing power is significantly reduced at ranges beyond 40 yards. Duck hunters will have to learn not to take long shots.

NEW YORK (AP) — Mike Marshall, the tireless relief pitcher who helped Los Angeles Dodgers win their first pennant in eight years, was named the National League's Cy Young Award winner today.

Marshall collected 17 of 24 possible first-place votes to outscore team-mate Andy Messersmith, 96 points to 66, and become the first relief pitcher in history to win the coveted prize.

The only other reliever to win a major award from the Baseball Writers' Association of America was Jim Konstanty, who was the NL's most valuable player during the Whiz Kid days of the Philadelphia Phillies in 1950.

The Dodgers took three of the first four places as Atlanta's Phil Niekro finished third with 15 points and Don Sutton of Los Angeles was fourth with 12.

Messersmith, along with Niekro, the only 20-game winners in the NL this year, received five first-place votes. Niekro and Sutton had one each. Pitchers from the NL champion Dodgers thus gained 23 of the 24 first-place votes.

The remainder of the field included Al Hrabosky of St. Louis with nine points; Cincinnati's Jack Billingham, eight; Cincinnati's Don Gullett, five; Clay Carroll of Cincinnati, two; and Pittsburgh's Dave Giusti, Buzz Capra of Atlanta, and Lynn McGlothen of St. Louis, all one.

A total of 24 writers voted, two from each NL city, and the point total was decided on a basis of five for first place, three for second and one for third.

Marshall appeared in a record-breaking 106 games to better his own NL standard of 92 set the year before with Montreal Expos. He became the first relief pitcher in NL history to qualify for the earned-run title with 208 innings. Marshall finished fourth in that category with a 2.42 mark.

The right-hander, who is considered somewhat of an intellectual, had a 15-12 won-lost record and 21 saves for Los Angeles this year.

NETTLES WINS ACQUITTAL

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Lions football player Ray Nettles, 25, was acquitted Tuesday of possessing marijuana.

Provincial court judge Murray Hyde dismissed the charge for lack of evidence after the crown said a substance taken from Nettles when he was arrested Oct. 24 was not analysed as a drug.

Nettles, the Lions' award-winning middle linebacker, is due to stand trial Jan. 7 on a charge of care and control of a motor vehicle while impaired by alcohol or a drug.

Braves Fail To Break Deadlock

Saanich Braves looked all set to snap a third-place tie with Juan de Fuca Gulls in the South Vancouver Island Junior "B" Hockey League Tuesday night — but they didn't quite make it.

Braves led 2-1 after the first period and 3-2 at the end of two in the interlocking game at George Pearkes Arena. But Nanaimo Buccaneers of the North Island Junior "B" League outscored their opponents 4-2 in the final penalty-filled period to snatch a 6-5 decision.

Robbie Coldwell scored twice to lead Saanich while Kim Bowles, Tom Tillotson and Brian Moroney were the other scorers.

Perfect Night For Gymnast

TORONTO (CP) — Hiroshi Kajiyama, member of Japan's gold-medal winning team at the recent World Gymnastic Championship in Bulgaria, swept all six men's events to finish first overall at an international invitational meet Tuesday.

Kajiyama, who won a silver medal in the floor exercise and a bronze on the vault at the world championship, completed his perfect night Tuesday with a triple back flip during the floor exercises—a manoeuvre which is expected to make him one of the top competitors in the event at the 1976 Olympics in Montreal.

The 105-pound Kajiyama finished ahead of Anirzei Szajna of Poland. In third place was Imre Molnar of Hungary.

Leading female competitor was East Germany's Angelika Hellman, who ranks third in the world following the world championship.

In second place was Hungarian Monika Caszar, with third place going to Angela Mayer of West Germany. Tied for fourth were Canadian women's champion Jennifer Diachun and Russia's Yelli Kim.

Outfielder Top Rookie

NEW YORK (AP) — Outfielders Bake McBride of St. Louis Cardinals and Greg Gross of Houston Astros plus first baseman Mike Hargrove of Texas Rangers received the most votes for baseball's 1974 major league rookie all-star team, it was announced Tuesday.

McBride topped the balloting, receiving 500 of the 574 ballots cast by players, managers and coaches. Gross collected 500 votes and Hargrove 472.

Others selected to the team were second baseman Larry Milbourne of Houston, shortstop Bucky Dent of Chicago White Sox, third baseman Bill Madlock of Chicago Cubs, outfielder Claudell Washington of Oakland A's, catcher Barry Foote of Montreal Expos, left-handed pitcher Frank Tanana of California Angels and right-handed pitcher John D'Aquisto of San Francisco Giants.

The balloting was conducted by the Topps Chewing Gum Co.

Russia and Chile End Soccer Feud

ROME (AP) — The Soviet Union and Chile have decided to patch up their soccer feud which broke out during the qualification round for the 1974 World Cup in West Germany, the International Soccer Federation FIFA announced Tuesday.

The Soviet Union refused to play Chile in the Santiago Stadium, saying the Chilean military junta used the venue as a prison camp after the overthrow of the government of President Salvador Allende. FIFA upheld the Chilean demand that the game be played and eliminated the Russians from the World Cup.

"The two federations have now decided to play that match as a gesture of friendship and reconciliation," said FIFA spokesman Rene Courte.

"They will play in Spain, the organizer of the 1982 World Cup. Net income from the game will go to Chile and after the match, all demands and disputes will be extinct."

Courte said the date for the game will be set by the countries and the Spanish federation.

1925 Catch Was Legitimate

COOPERSTOWN, N. Y.
(AP) — The truth has come out about one of the most disputed plays in World series history.

Right-fielder Sam Rice of Washington Senators did indeed catch a line drive by Earl Smith of Pittsburgh Ebersoles while tumbling into the bleacher seats during the third game of the Series in 1925.

The details of the controversial play were revealed in a letter to the Baseball Hall of Fame left by Rice to be opened after his death. Rice, inducted into the Hall of Fame in 1963 by the oldtimers committee, died Oct. 13 at the age of 84.

The letter said in part:
"The ball was a line drive headed for the bleachers toward right centre. . . I turned slightly to my right and had the ball in view all the way in. . . about 15 feet from bleachers
I jumped as high as I could and . . . the ball hit the centre of the pocket in my glove — I had a death grip on it."

"My feet hit the barrier . . .
and I toppled over on my stomach into first row of bleachers . . . at no time did I lose possession of the ball."

It was ruled that Rice had caught the ball although there was doubt about it. The game, played Oct. 10, 1925, was won by the Senators 4-3, but Pittsburgh won the series, 4-3.

Rice wrote the letter July 26, 1965.
He was elected to the Hall in recognition of his .322 lifetime batting average, including 2,987 hits, and stolen base exploits during his total of 20 years with the Senators and Cleveland Indians.

DEPARTMENT OF HIGHWAYS
Honourable Graham R. Lea, Minister

Guffaws of Ridicule, Silence Human Rights Reaction—Ruff

VANCOUVER (CP) — The director of the Human Rights Commission said Tuesday the reaction to human rights from the majority of the public is silence.

Kathleen Ruff told delegates to the 19th annual convention of the B.C. Federation of Labor that occasionally this silence is "broken by a guffaw of ridicule."

She said the greatest form of contempt is ridicule and is a belittling denial of humanity. Ms. Ruff said that ridicule surrounds women's efforts to get human rights and she called on the union movement to give strong practical support to human rights programs.

"It is easy to say you are in favor of human rights. I have yet to meet someone who says they are not — but actions speak louder than words," she said.

She said human rights means change and to do that groups would sway and a voice in society have got to end discrimination not just an isolated incident, "but the whole pattern that mars our society."

The women's rights committee of the federation levelled a charge at the trade union movement saying "action in many cases is not taking the place of lip service."

Committee chairperson Joy Langan said: "When preparing this report the committee was dismayed to discover that many areas of this report would be covering the same issues as reports in the past."

She said it is not good enough to say "we are against discriminatory contracts or we believe in encouraging women into jobs and trades that have only recently been open to them. The time has come to put action where the words have been and actively correct the flaws and omissions in collective agreements."

A resolution calling for a female minister of women to fulfill the office of a women's rights ombudsperson was referred back to the committee for further study.

Delegates approved a resolution calling for the federation to hire an extra staff member whose main function would be to advise and assist women to become active in their union affairs.

Another resolution called for the recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women to be fully implemented.

Others called on the provincial government to establish 24-hour community-based child care centres for children under three, and that study courses dealing with the role of women in the development of society be introduced into primary and secondary schools.

69 Policemen Face Charges

TORONTO (CP) — The names of 69 Toronto policemen were listed before the Metropolitan Board of Police Commissioners over a 9-month period on charges ranging from neglect of duty to discreditable conduct.

A copy of the list of charges and the penalties applied by the police commission was distributed to Metro Council Tuesday at the request of Alderman William Archer.

The alderman said that as a result of his work with a provincial study group on policing, he was aware that charges could also be laid against policemen under the police act or dealt with by the commission or the courts.

STOLEN COINS RECOVERED

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (UPI) — Five persons were arrested Tuesday in connection with the theft of millions of dollars worth of ancient Greek and Roman coins from Harvard University's Fogg Museum last December.

Daniel Steiner, Harvard's General Counsel, said the recovered coins made up about 40 per cent of the 5,650 coins, dating from the 7th century B.C. to the 4th century A.D., taken in the Dec. 2, 1973 robbery.

"There is no way telling the value of the (recovered) coins at this time. They have to be inventoried and checked one by one. That's going to take some time," Steiner said.

Steiner said the value of the collection was "not as high as originally estimated. But it was several million dollars."

'Instant Newspaper' Starts 2-Year Test

LONDON (CP) — After 7,000 hours of testing, the BBC has started regular live transmissions of its "instant newspaper" — a system whereby television viewers can have any one of 100 pages of news displayed on their screen at the push of a button.

The service, called CEEFAX, will transmit regularly updated daily bulletins for an experimental two-year period to test public reaction and see which kinds of information are most popular.

News summaries, sports results, business and travel information and weather forecasts will be among the many choices of information. Among those the service will be aimed at are banks, stockbrokers and newspapers.

The BBC's director of engineering, James Redmond, said that most of the technical problems of CEEFAX had been solved.

"Our aim now is to test reaction with real news and other genuine program information," he said.

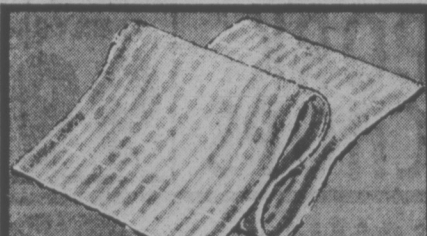

The main attraction of CEEFAX is that the viewer can check on share prices, sports results or TV and radio program schedules at any time during normal program hours.

With a push-button panel the viewer selects the particular news he requires and it appears on the screen. CEEFAX uses two unused lines out of a normal 625-line television picture to display a typical page of about 100 words or simple diagrams. A special decoder is needed at present but this is likely to be built into the next generation of television receivers.

Airlines 'Booze War' Breaks Out

MIAMI (UPI) — National Airlines, strikebound for 108 days until last Friday, began passing out free cocktails to economy class passengers on its Miami-New York flights this week and touched off "a booze war" with competing Eastern Airlines.

Eastern Airlines chairman Floyd Hall, who denounced the National Airlines action, said Eastern had no choice but to match the free drinks.

Hall predicted that the cost of the free drinks eventually would have to be passed along in the form of higher fares to drinkers and teetotalers alike.

If it spreads, Hall said, it could cost the nation's airlines $100 million annually.

Delta Airlines, which already serves steak and free champagne to coach passengers, indicated it was studying the National Airlines action.

Saanich Set For Plowmen

Plowmen from Vancouver Island and the B.C. mainland will participate in the Saanich Plowing Association annual match at the Moffat farm, Sayward Road, Saanich, on Saturday.

About 20 contestants, men and women, are expected.

Doug Mar, of Saanich, the B.C. plowing champ, will take part in the event, as will Charlie Thomson of Chilliwack, who ploughed in the 1973 world championship match in Ireland.

Teacher Pensions Study Set

Former Saskatchewan school teacher Bruce Wiggins has been hired by the British Columbia Teachers' Federation to conduct a feasibility study on teachers' pensions. Provincial Secretary Ernie Hall announced.

After teaching for 20 years, Wiggins served 13 years on the staff of the Saskatchewan Teachers' Federation, specializing in pensions. He retired in 1972 and joined William Morris & Co. Ltd., a Saskatoon branch office.

The provincial secretary said that before any decision is made on the feasibility study, the government intends to consider the implications for other plans such as the Public Service Superannuation Plan and the Municipal Superannuation Plan.

From Russia With Talent

By AUDREY JOHNSON
Times Staff

Polished professionalism in style and vocal technique and high artistry characterized the two Soviet Ukraine opera stars who appeared in concert at McPherson Playhouse, Tuesday.

With minor exceptions, the two were in wonderful voice considering that they are in the midst of a Canadian tour which began in Toronto Oct. 20 and has crossed the continent with not more than two days between each of nine engagements so far.

Yevhenia Miroshnichenko is a beautiful, robust-looking woman with a super-flexible coloratura soprano voice. Her companion on the program, Dmytro Hnatiuk, is a big man with a big, richly timbred baritone voice and an engaging manner.

Their program would have been a demanding one under any circumstances; it was full of such difficult operatic fare as Lucia's mad scene from Donizetti's Lucia di Lammermoor, the bell song from Debussy's Lakme, Macbeth's great dramatic aria from the Verdi opera.

There were many beautiful Ukrainian folk songs and duet numbers as well, all presented with a perfection of style, both dramatic and lyrical that roused the imagination of the listener.

The pleasure of a rare evening was enhanced and made even more complete by the presence at the piano of a superb and enchanting artist, Alla Tolstych.

Operatic accompaniments on the piano are a challenge of no mean kind, being transcriptions from full orchestra scores. Frequently in performance they are less than satisfactory.

But Madame Tolstych enriched the occasion, not only with her splendid technique and full tone, but with her distinct sense of the operatic mood and action and her sensitive-legato touch that, on a non-sustaining instrument, so remarkably approximated the flute obligato in the Lakme aria.

Despite admiration for Miroshnichenko's fluent runs, trills, flowery ornaments and exceptional range in the operatic numbers, for my taste her voice was somewhat cold and brittle in this area.

It warmed and became a more touching and satisfying instrument when singing the folk songs where her lyric rather than athletic qualities were in ascendency.

Hnatiuk's vivid, impassioned performance of a Ukrainian revolutionary song roused shouting enthusiasm from the good-sized audience. Minutes later he was controlling that great resonance in superb pianissimo and lingering sustained passages of another folk song, My Ukraine.

Brel . . . Alive, Living in Victoria

By ELEANOR BOYLE
Times Staff

When audience fears were confirmed and the show was over, the cast of Jacques Brel is Alive and Well and Living in Paris immediately received a standing ovation Tuesday at Open Space.

No one held back their applause as the actors had not held back either voices or emotion during the performance.

The play's opening night was attended by 150 people.

A tribute to Jacques Brel, Belgian poet and singer introduced as the "forerunner" to current folksingers, the play is a collection of his songs, performed in an outdoor Paris cafe.

Four principal actors on stage both warmed and disturbed the audience with tunes that touched on every subject from life's madness, through a timid girl's step into big city life, to being "next," and to forgetting the name of "that" person etched in a memory.

The voices were strong as the songs demanded.

The professionalism of the actors, musicians and invisible staff of the host Western Canada Theatre Company was almost unsuitable to Open Space's small stage, meagre seating capacity and inelegant surroundings.

Directing the show is Tom Kerr of Godspell and The Caretaker fame, both of which played in Vancouver for extended periods during 1973-74.

GREMLIN TANK CRACKS

OTTAWA (CP) — The fuel tank of a 1973 American Motors Gremlin car cracked along a main seam following a 30-mile-an-hour barrier crash test, according to the latest results of federal auto safety tests.

G. D. Campbell, director of the road and motor vehicle traffic safety branch for the transport department, said transport officials have asked to review data of similar tests conducted by the manufacturer, American Motors (Canada) Ltd., of Brampton, Ont.

The officials want to know if the failure was an isolated case or if it might be a problem in other 1973 Gremlins.

The failure was the only one among 15 in 1973 and 1974 model cars given the fuel tank test. The test sample included five imported cars.

Under federal safety law, the fuel tanks of all new cars sold in Canada must remain intact during and after the crash test.

Ministry officials said the Gremlin tank would have spilled gasoline resulting in possible fire or explosion.

The transport department said in a news release that the motor vehicle safety branch found the motor vehicle industry generally is "in compliance with safety standards" following 12 months of tests.

The safety branch tested 50 cars, 27 snowmobiles and more than 2,000 vehicle components during the 1973-1974 fiscal year.

Home announces a heating protection program that could pay for itself in one cold night.

HOME is introducing two furnace protection plans as part of their Comfort Guard heating program. To save you a little worry. And perhaps a lot of money.

PLAN A: CONDITIONING AND EMERGENCY SERVICE $16.50 PER YEAR

This HOME plan provides regular conditioning (at 12 to 15 month intervals) covering 23 essential services. It also includes any number of emergency calls that might be required. You pay only for necessary parts—unless you're also covered by HOME's Parts Replacement Plan, below.

PLAN B: PARTS REPLACEMENT PLAN $15.95 PER YEAR

Under this plan, HOME will repair or replace 23 key oil heating parts that might become defective during the year. You pay only for the necessary labor—unless you're also covered by HOME's Conditioning and Emergency Service Plan.

Which plan is best for you? Or should you go for the total protection of both? Talk it over with your HOME Comfort Guard oil heating agent. Then leave all your heating worries at HOME.

Car Dealers 'In Trouble'

TORONTO (CP) — Morton Shulman, millionaire author and New Democratic Party member of the provincial legislature, said Tuesday inflation will probably force many car dealers out of business in the next few years.

Addressing the Federation of Automobile Dealer Associations of Canada, Dr. Shulman said inflation will force the public to buy food and shelter instead of cars.

"Enjoy the good times, they're almost over," he told the almost 1,000 car dealers in attendance.

He said people can still buy cars, stumps and antiques as a hedge against inflation, but in a few years they will only be able to afford the necessities.

The best investment is a farm on which food can be grown to provide for present needs and sold for housing in the future.

David Watt, federation president, doubted Dr. Shulman's prediction, because, he said, most people buy cars out of necessity — for transportation.

"After all, if you buy that new car, you have to get there somehow."

RAFTMAN RESCUED

A fisherman from Ladner on the mainland was rescued from his rubber raft Tuesday afternoon after his 21-foot gill-netter Ocean Space caught fire and sank off Port Renfrew.

A spokesman for the Pacific Rescue Co-ordination Centre said K. L. Kirkland was brought to Victoria, apparently having escaped serious injury, aboard the fishboat Sea Pack.

A seaplane landed beside the Sea Pack about 1:30 p.m. to tell her crew a gill-netter had been spotted on fire about seven miles away.

The Sea Pack rushed to the spot, about 15 miles southeast of Port Renfrew and seven miles off Sombrio Point.

When the Sea Pack arrived, Kirkland was in the raft and his boat ablaze. Shortly after, the Ocean Space sank.

Beer Bars Draw Line-Ups

By FRANK CREPEAU

MOSCOW (AP) — A night out at a neighborhood beer bar in Moscow begins on the sidewalk, standing in line.

In this city of 7.5 million there are relatively few cafes, snugs, restaurants, pubs or corner bars where people can gather for a drink or a snack. The telephone book lists only 22 beer halls in the entire city.

Perhaps the low number reflects only the lack of such trails for ordinary Russians. Most drink their beer from communal glasses at outdoor kiosks. Or perhaps Communist authorities want to discourage people from gathering to discuss daily life or politics.

The beer bar near the Kiev railway station has chairs for 150 persons on two storeys of a glass-fronted, modern building. Since it is almost always crowded, a doorman is on duty to let people in a few at a time.

Two naval officers walk to the front of the line and are let in.

CHECK YOUR COAT

After 40 minutes you get inside and check your coat. Wearing a coat in a public building is frowned on in Russia.

Fluorescent lights glare down on the crowded room. The smell is a compound of cigarette smoke, stale beer, perspiration and crayfish cooking. The beer is only two or three per cent alcohol.

There are no beer mugs. Beer is dispensed by machines. Put in 20 kopeks and you get a measure of beer. Those with mugs play the beer dispenser like a slot machine — feeding in coins and filling one mug after the other.

Two habitués sweep down on a littered table, grab dirty mugs, rinse them quickly in an aluminum pot and start drawing beer without waiting.

A Red Army lieutenant looks in the pot and grimaces. It seems to be a mixture of dishwater, beer dregs, soap and other unidentified substances. There is a piece of chewed cucumber floating in the liquid and a cigarette butt.

The soldier calls to a woman attendant. "You can't rinse glasses in this," he says. "Of course not," she replies angrily. "That's just slops. Wait for clean glasses."

SERVICE SLOW

Mugs finally arrive, fresh from washing. With a 20-kopek coin about 25 cents at the official rate you get a partly filled, pint-sized mug of beer.

Plant Must Close

LUDWIGSHAFEN, West Germany (Reuter) — Health authorities ordered a food factory at nearby Neuhof to remain closed indefinitely Monday on grounds prepacked potato salads distributed by the firm might have caused an outbreak of typhoid. Three persons among the 247 cases of typhoid in the country have died of the disease. Most of the victims were from southwest German cities and had eaten the salad.

Indusons Bay Company

There seems to be a staff of about 15 or 20 men and women at the bar and in theory, some of them wait on tables. But service is so slow, most people serve themselves.

With half a mug of beer, you search for a vacant chair. Most people turn you away with a rude and unfriendly "no."

Some patrons are obviously drunk.

It became clear how they got that way on such weak beer. They pull bottles of vodka from briefcases and manufacture what is called a "yorch." The word designates a small, silvery fish, but is commonly used to mean a generous shot of vodka in beer — a Russian boiler-maker.

Others bring their own wine. Although the bar doesn't sell hard liquor, the staff pays no attention to those who provide their own bottles.

Eventually, someone invites you to share a table. The host of the small, impromptu party arrives with six mugs of beer and goes back for more.

Two women pull packages wrapped in Pravda from their bags. They contain a salty, bone-filled, dried fish. The fish is hammered on the table to loosen the skin and, then ripped apart with teeth and fingers.

The fish helps the beer, which is slightly sweet and flat.

Tables are littered with fish scales, the remains of a sausage sandwich, apple cores and cigarette butts. It is considered bad manners to put out a cigarette on the floor, but acceptable to grind it out on the table or drop it in a beer glass.

A bell rings. It's 9:30 p.m. In another half-hour the lights dim and the last celebrants are being herded out.

The beer bar's patrons start home. Far down the street, two young men start singing a song that begins, "Friends forever . . ."

Oil States To Hold Meeting

ABHU DHABI (Reuter)

The United Arab Emirates government today confirmed it had called a two-day meeting of Persian Gulf oil states here, opening on Saturday, and that other Arab producers and Iran were invited.

The conference will be at the ministers' level, and so far all invitations have been accepted, government officials said.

The government newspaper Al Itihad said today the ministers will discuss oil price developments and "the attack launched by the industrialized countries against the petroleum producing countries."

VANCOUVER (CP) — Engineering student John Peters plants to beat the high cost of gas with an electric motorcycle.

The 21-year-old University of British Columbia student spent his summer building a two-horsepower bike with the aid of a $540 Opportunities for Youth grant.

The motorcycle, powered by five standard lead-acid batteries wired together into one 30-volt battery, is capable of travelling up to 28 miles an hour and can do 40 to 50 miles before the battery needs recharging.

It has cost Mr. Peters more than $1,200 and he hopes to improve its speed and range next summer.

"I'll try to get a better motor to make it faster, ideally up to 60 miles an hour for freeway driving," he said. "It is possible but expensive."

He said because electric vehicles can be recharged overnight they would not increase power consumption during peak daytime hours.

Mr. Peters said he decided to build his motorcycle to show that present technology can produce an inexpensive vehicle for commuting.

Electric vehicles are non-polluting, almost noiseless and do not deplete petroleum resources. He said recharging the battery costs about 15 cents.

In addition, the motorcycle is virtually maintenance free since it has no clutch, transmission, cooling or exhaust system. When stopped at a light, the engine does not idle and so draws no current.

Mr. Peters said he has insured the motorcycle for $42 a

Prairie Search For Oil, Gas In Tailspin

By JOE MA
CALGARY (CP) — The search for crude oil and natural gas in Western Canada is in a tailspin despite predictions that the two precious fuels will be scarce by 1980.

The industry blames government for the decline in exploration and drilling activity, saying it is unable to commit resources to high-cost exploration programs when higher taxes and a topsy-turvy political climate are clouding the future.

Drilling activity was down an alarming 16 per cent in the first half of 1974, although the situation improved somewhat heading into the final three months of the year and the drilling shortfall moderated to a figure about 10 per cent below 1973 activity.

The sharpest reduction was in Saskatchewan, where a New Democratic Party government appeared "determined to kill the private industry," said Hans Maciej of the Canadian Petroleum Association.

Drilling in Saskatchewan was down 50 per cent to Sept. 21, with 210 wells. Production was also down, with the industry expected to produce an average of 157,467 barrels a day in October, down more than 37,000 barrels from September and 73,000 from a year ago.

BLAMES EXPORT TAX
"Medium crude has been priced out of the American market — it was the export tax that priced it out," said J. G. Wotherspoon, Saskatchewan's deputy minister of mineral resources.

"Our oil is selling for around $11 and $12 a barrel while other crudes are going for $8."

Mr. Wotherspoon said Alberta is experiencing the same price problem, although not to such a great extent, and "both governments will have to decide whether they can take this cutback."

Alberta production was down some 200,000 barrels a day while drilling to Sept. 21 was down four per cent to 2,482 wells. Normally, 86 per cent of the drilling in Western Canada takes place in Alberta.

Drilling in British Columbia was down six per cent to 122 wells, and 20 per cent in the Northwest and Yukon Territories to 53 wells.

Manitoba was the only province to buck the trend, with drilling up 275 per cent to 11 from four wells but the province produces an insignificant one-third of one per cent of Canada's crude oil and natural gas.

In 1973, almost 4,400 exploratory and development wells were drilled in Western Canada, up 31 per cent from 1972. The industry had planned to increase exploration spending by 10 per cent in 1974 but pulled in its horns, when the federal government imposed an export tax, provincial governments boosted production taxes, and land-sale prices soared.

Men and equipment began to move out and by Oct. 1 there were 312 rigs, of which 112 were working, in Western Canada compared with 334, of which 151 were working, at the same time a year earlier.

A survey by the Canadian Society of Exploration Geophysicists shows that more than 50 companies have relocated or opened offices in Denver, Colo., during the last two years and that 40 firms have moved into active exploration in the North Sea.

At least 30 seismic crews and 190 key geophysical personnel had left Canada since last winter, reducing the number of available crews this winter to 45 from a normal 70.

Mr. Wotherspoon said it is much more profitable for companies to drill for oil in North Dakota and Montana than Saskatchewan.

"There have been no major discoveries in Saskatchewan for a number of years and the major companies have lost interest here. Industry claims that the price it is getting for oil is not adequate."

The Saskatchewan government has introduced a 30-cents-a-barrel incentive for companies doing exploration work in the province but so far it has been no substantial spur to activity.

Bill Spicer, the Saskatchewan manager for the Canadian Petroleum Association, said that between December, 1973, and June, 1974, the return to oil producers has gone down 11 per cent while the return to the government has risen sharply.

He said that the 177 wells drilled to the end of August this year, compared with 432 last year, 60 per cent were for natural gas. At the same time, the government's energy corporation, Sask-Oil, has started competing against industry. The corporation has taken out permits for five wells and is reported to have struck gas in one of them.

Scotty Cameron of the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada said the industry is anxiously waiting for Finance Minister John Turner's budget, expected next month.

It was Mr. Turner's budget last May that set off a series of exploration reductions when it set out a plan that would have eliminated the petroleum industry's right to use provincial tax payments as a federal tax education.

MAY BE MODERATED
"We can't operate if we're taxed out of existence," said J. A. Armstrong of Imperial Oil Ltd.

That budget was defeated and the Liberal government has indicated that there may be some moderation in resource taxation when it is reintroduced.

In addition to paying higher taxes, the industry has also found itself paying more for exploration rights to Crown-owned land. In the first half of 1974, it paid provincial governments $62.7 million for 3,273,000 acres, compared with $46.5 million for 5,795,000 acres last year. In Alberta, the price per acre increased by 350 per cent to $29.64 from $8.45.

The Canadian Petroleum Association, in a brief to the National Energy Board, said the price of natural gas must rise rapidly to provide the incentives that would avert a shortage. The same goes for oil.

Frank McFadzean of Shell Oil Co. said the price for synthetic crude oil from Alberta's oil sands must be high enough to provide a decent return on an initial investment that will reach $10,000 to $15,000 a barrel.

Industry sources said exploration prospects in Canada will improve if the industry can look forward to reasonably stable government policy for four or five years. But, because drilling programs are budgeted well ahead, the exploration slump may continue until next spring.

TOPLESS VOTE GOES TO NAYS
COCOA BEACH, Fla. (UPI) — A referendum banning topless sunbathing passed by a surprisingly close vote Tuesday but a leader of the bare-breasted forces vowed she wouldn't be bound by the decision.

"The whole National Guard couldn't make me turn my top on," said Cindy Mills, 22, a 38-24-36 go-go dancer at the Missile Lounge.

The vote was 1,589 to 1,324 with some absentee ballots still to be counted, and some observers were surprised at the narrow margin in view of the campaigning by Mrs. Lee Gagnon and 36 women volunteers. Mrs. Gagnon said her group had contacted 5,000 of the beach's 5,400 registered voters to urge them to vote for the topless ban.

BOARD ADOPTS 'IDEAL SCHOOL'

VANCOUVER (CP) — An alternative school that started two years ago by offering teachers "freedom, fascination and object poverty" and operating in an old sausage factory has been adopted officially by the Vancouver school board.

And the founder of the school now is employed as a student teacher.

Garry Nixon founded Ideal School, featuring low student-teacher ratios and offering alternative courses to supplement the basic curriculum that students need to receive high school diplomas.

But Mr. Nixon said the school could not have survived without raising its fees — a move he was reluctant to make.

"The only way we could get government money was to join the public school system but we have been promised autonomy," he said.

And when that move was made, Mr. Nixon, who had no formal teaching training, was forced to give up his directorship and return to the ranks as a student teacher.

"I've been a teacher in B.C. for 11 years — but I don't have that little piece of paper," he said. "This summer I went back to university for the first time in 12 years."

Idea School is not a free school and classes, held at an old school recently reopened by the board, are compulsory.

"Basically the idea is that if you get younger students who want to learn and teachers who want to teach and small classes and a good atmosphere, a school should work," Mr. Nixon explained. "I know our school works because the kids like it."

Besides courses that fulfil provincial requirements, Ideal offers subjects such as geology, Russian, photography, Asian studies and Mandarin Chinese.

"We also go on a lot of field trips," he said. "Last year we took a group to Victoria and spent three or four days studying the legislature and talking to cabinet ministers."

Mr. Nixon said school rules are a matter of common sense and students are given a say in rule-making and policy decisions.

The students have a voice here. They're permitted to come to staff meetings."

CALGARY (CP) — Calgary commissioner Denis Cole said Tuesday the city will ask the courts to enforce an injunction issued last month against the Canadian Union of Public Employees (CUPE) to prevent strike action by the city's 1,800 outside workers.

The outside workers voted to strike this week to back up demands for a mid-contract adjustment to the cost of living index. The men have requested a $1.50 per hour increase immediately. The contract doesn't expire until the spring.

Cole said the city will take the legal action in the courts today.

"All members of CUPE local 37 were enjoined to stay with their work and we will be producing evidence to show that they have not done so," said Cole.

Individual union members who left their jobs Tuesday morning could be fined or imprisoned for contempt of court as could union leaders.

Cole said no decision has been made whether the city will seek any specific punishment from the courts. He said "we're simply going to court to draw attention to the fact that the injunction has been broken."

The workers, who struck Oct. 17 and 22, are also asking that a 10-per-cent pay raise which is to go into effect Jan. 1 be implemented immediately, and that the entire agreement be renegotiated by January.

The union was forbidden to take any strike action until the contract expires.

No Socreds Running

SASKATOON (CP) — The Saskatchewan Social Credit League probably will not run any candidates in the next provincial election, Doug Sadler, a party spokesman, said.

Sadler said it had been decided the provincial party would concentrate on the federal field where there is "considerably more time" to organize and mount a campaign.

Rule Review Urged

EDMONTON (CP) — A permanent committee to review all regulations made by the provincial cabinet was recommended in a report tabled in the Alberta legislature Tuesday.

The report, prepared by a special committee of eight

MLAs — five Progressive Conservatives and three Social Credit members — said the permanent legislative committee should examine all regulations to determine whether they were authorized by statute, whether they constitute "unusual use of powers conferred by statute" and whether they violate personal rights.

Fertilizers 'First'

CALGARY (CP) — It is inconceivable that natural gas should be considered for use in manufacturing throw-away plastics at a time when there is a desperate world-wide need for fertilizers made from the gas to promote the growth of food, John Harapiak said Tuesday.

Harapiak, marketing superintendent for Western Cooperative Fertilizers Ltd., made the statement as the Alberta Environment Conservation Authority opened a public hearing into the use of pesticides and herbicides.

Because of the "desperate need" for fertilizers, Harapiak said "every effort should be made to ensure the limited supplies available" are used efficiently.

Control Transferred

STAND OFF, Alta. (CP) — The Blood Indians have achieved full control of a profitable prefabricated housing industry with the assistance of the company under which the industrialization experiment on the southern Alberta reserve was nurtured to success.

O. A. Nerland, manager of credit and finance for Wickes Canada Ltd., a division of Wickes Inc., an American mobile and modular-home building company, said Tuesday the amicable transfer of control of Kainai Industries has just recently been completed.

800 Lives at Stake SASKATOON (CP) — A policy planning consultant with the federal health and welfare department said Tuesday the compulsory use of seat belts could prevent 800 highway deaths in Canada annually.

Dr. D. J. Hauser added that such a move would also result in sharp reductions in injuries to the head, chest and spine and subsequent savings in health care costs.

Witches Lose Their Realism

CHICAGO (AP) — These days witches are in the news generally only around Hallowpresent sophisticated age, to our forefathers they were real. In fact, some people were even afraid to yawn because of them. In the Middle Ages people believed evil spirits made them yawn and then jumped down their victims' throats while their mouths were open, according to World Book Encyclopedia. So people covered their mouths more for protection than politeness. Those who couldn't stifle their yawns and were invaded by the spirits had to have them and the sickness they brought exorcised, or driven out, usually through a combination of commands, prayers and ceremonies. Throughout history, the mystique of magic, evil spirits and witchcraft led to the persecution of thousands of innocent people, mostly women. Some historians estimate the Christian Church put about 300,000 women to death for witchcraft between 1400 and the late 1700s. Many suffered terrible torture until they confessed to being witches to avoid further torment. There were many tests to determine whether a woman was a witch. Examiners sometimes searched for "devil's marks." These were moles, scars or other bodily marks that could be stuck with a pin without causing pain. These marks were an indication of guilt. In another test, the suspect's arms and legs were tied together and she was thrown into deep water. If she floated, she was considered guilty of being a witch. If she drowned, she was innocent. During the 1600s and 1700s a deep fear of witchcraft swept most of Europe. Thousands suspected of being witches were tried and executed. Courts allowed gossip and rumor as evidence. In many cases, children testified against their own parents. American colonists brought the belief with them from England and suspected witches suffered persecution. In Massachusetts during 1692, the colonists executed 20 persons as witches and imprisoned 150 others. During the mid-1900s, a new interest in witchcraft occurred in Europe and the United States. As a result, witchcraft festivals called Witches' Sabbaths take place four times a year. The most important festival occurs on Halloween.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

Sugar in Any Form Is 'Devastating'

By DR. JEAN MAYER

Q. I am well aware that we are eating too much sugar and that it would be desirable to cut way down. I'm wondering if it would be advantageous to switch to raw or brown sugar?

A. No. Both the decay-producing cariogenic and the caloric impact of sugar — white, raw or brown — are equally devastating. Ten grams (roughly 2 teaspoons of white sugar) provides 38 empty calories. So do 10 grams of raw sugar. And you'll get only about one less calorie if you use brown sugar. That's hardly a significant saving.

Brown sugar is simply less refined than white sugar. It contains more moisture and a substantial number of trace minerals, from which it gets its characteristic flavor. But the amounts of these minerals are simply too small to make any difference in the quality of your diet.

True raw sugar, incidentally, is not sold in this country, since it contains impurities that make it unfit for human consumption. The raw sugar sold in nature food stores is really sucrose that contains traces of cane fibre or beet pulp to give it approximately the same taste and texture of raw sugar. Using sugar in any form is costly.

Q. Recently my daughter decided to become a vegetarian, but she doesn't like vegetables. Is it still possible for her to have a nutritionally adequate diet?

A. It is quite possible to eliminate vegetables and still be a well-nourished vegetarian. It simply takes more planning. The eating of fruits and vegetables make important contributions of vitamins and minerals, as well as providing bulk for normal bowel function. However, vegetables are a better source of some nutrients than most fruits.

For example, vegetables are important sources of carotene, which the body converts to Vitamin A. With the notable exception of apricots, yellow peaches, prunes, avocados, and cantaloupe, fruits are poor sources of carotene. If your daughter uses these fruits, drinks whole or Vitamin A-fortified skim milk, and eats cheese and eggs, she will have no shortage of Vitamin A.

Vegetables — particularly the green leafy ones — are important sources of iron. But dried fruits, such as apricots, peaches, prunes and raisins are a good substitute.

And finally, some vegetables contribute significant amounts of calcium. Fruits generally are poorer sources of calcium, but that, of course, can come from milk and cheese.

Q. I am a 52-year-old housewife and manage to control my weight by eating what I think is a sensible diet. However, I eat no bread, and my husband insists that I should. Am I missing any nutrients by not eating bread?

A. Bread is certainly not indispensable to a well-balanced diet. But that does not mean that bread is without merit. Whole grain or enriched bread does contain B vitamins and iron. In addition, whole grain bread supplies important trace elements, as well as necessary fibre.

But two other points should be made. First, remember that the fattening power of bread is a function of two things: the amount you eat and what you put on it. For example, a tuna salad sandwich contains about 280 calories. But by spreading the bread with a tablespoon of mayonnaise, you will increase the caloric count of the sandwich to 380 calories.

The other point relates to your total diet picture. While we often talk about high cholesterol levels in men, remember that this is also a problem for post-menopausal women. If you are excluding bread as well as other carbohydrates, yet are eating a high protein diet which is also probably high in saturated fat, you may need to revise your overall weight-control plan. A diet that contains more carbohydrate and less fat may be better for your general health. It would be a good idea to have a thorough physical exam, including a determination of your blood cholesterol.

YOUR TURN TO COOK:
LIME JELLO SALAD

By HELEN BRIDDEN

(Today's reader recipe was sent in by Mrs. Helen Bridden, 4334 Happy Valley. If you have a family or favorite recipe you would gladly share, please send it to the Times Family Desk, 2621 Douglas.)

This recipe came from a little fooling around in the kitchen, which most cooks like to do from time to time. I put it together about 20 years ago.

tried it out on an 81-year-old neighbor who loved it and suggested it would make a great side dish for Christmas dinner, and have been using it as such ever since. But, it is good anytime of year and also makes a fine dessert.

The family liked it so much, each member now has a copy of the recipe. It serves 6, but can easily be doubled.

LIME JELLO SALAD
1 package lime jello

1 cup boiling water
24 marshmallows, cut up
2 cups cottage cheese
1 small can drained crushed pineapple

1/2 pint whipping cream
Combine the lime jello and boiling water, stir and let sit until wobbly, or just about firm. Then add, all together, the remaining ingredients. Whip until firm and set in the fridge.

Invest In Beans

It doesn't take the Dow-Jones to tell you when the market is "off". One look at the prices of a week's groceries gives that away. So, it's the smart shopper who knows the economics of buying into the market with vegetables high in protein and low in cost.

Consider that one cup of baked beans supplies protein equal to 2 ounces of meat at a percentage of the price. Vegetables have other pluses, too — they are high in iron and low in cholesterol.

An easy way to cash in on this dollar savings and protein benefit is to use convenient brick oven baked beans. Combined with ground beef, chopped green pepper and onions, these beans in their rich dark brown sugar sauce make a sandwich worthy of dinner or lunch.

BEAN BURGERS

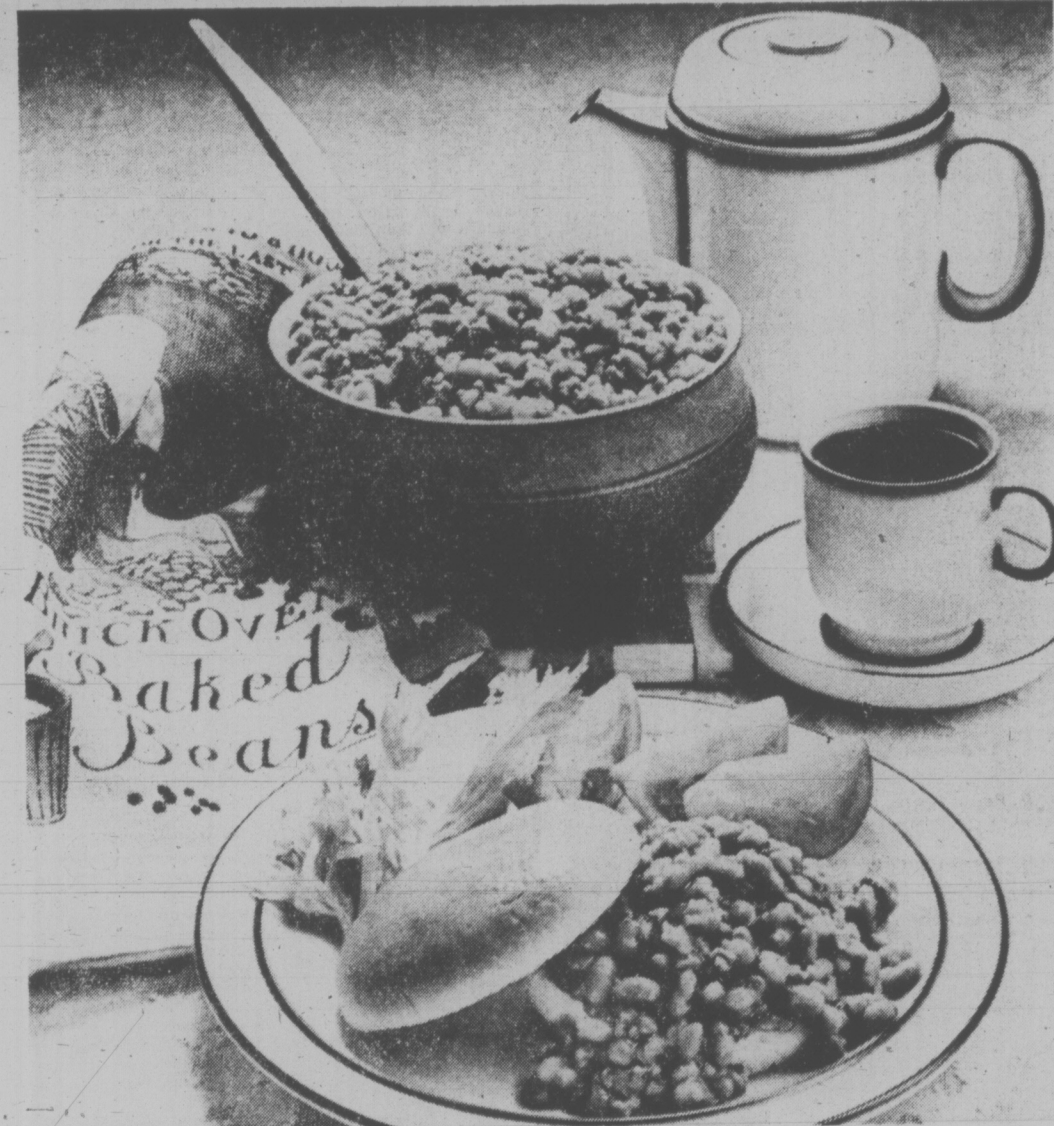

1 pound ground beef,
1/4 cup chopped onion,
per.
1/4 cup chopped onion,
1 tablespoon oil,
1 28 ounce can brick oven baked beans,
6 hamburger rolls, split and toasted.

Fry ground beef, green pepper and onion in oil for 5 minutes. In a saucepan, heat beans and add meat mixture. Spoon over bottoms of hamburger rolls and top with remaining rolls. Makes 6 bean burgers.

HAM AND BEAN BAKE

2 slices bacon,
1 medium green pepper, chopped,
2 medium onions, chopped,
1 28 ounce can brick oven baked beans,
1 1/2 pound cooked ham slice,
2 tablespoons brown sugar.
Cook bacon until crisp; crumble. Saute pepper and onion in bacon fat until tender. In a two-quart casserole, combine bacon, green pepper, onion and baked beans. Remove excess fat from ham slice. Cut slice into serving pieces; stand pieces on top of beans, partially pressing into beans. Sprinkle ham with brown sugar. Bake at 350 degrees F. for one hour, baste ham occasionally with sauce from beans. Makes 5 to 6 servings.

Tempura: Menu Intruder

By CRAIG CLAIBORNE
OSAKA, Japan — Someone here observed recently that all the world's cuisines can be categorized according to their most characteristic cooking medium: Chinese cooking is based on oil, French on butter and Japanese on water.

It has long been a source of fascination — puzzlement even — that where the Japanese kitchen is concerned, there is one outstanding exception to that thought: tempura. Whereas dishes such as mizutani or mizudaki made with chicken or fish cooked in water with vegetables; or shabu shabu and sukiyaki, both cooked with liquids, seem as much a part of a pattern, tempura, consisting of a variety of foods all deep fried in oil has always seemed a welcome intruder. Enormously appealing but nonetheless foreign. On this visit to Japan we discovered why.

"It is well-documented," our friend, Shigeo Taji, told us, "that tempura was brought into Japan by Portuguese priests who came to this country by way of Nagasaki in the 16th century."

Taji is the distinguished head of the Ecole Technique Hotelier here, the largest hotel school in Japan. He is a scholar and an author (his books include "The Life of Escott" and annual travel guides to the restaurants of Europe for the Japanese public).

The word tempura, or tempura as it is sometimes spelled, is derived from a Portuguese word, temporo, that has to do with cooking.

Tempura's original form in Japan was probably as what the French call beignets and the English call fritters. The most important ingredient in tempura — indeed, the essential ingredient — is battered shrimp, with other foods such as battered-fried vegetables used only as a complement to the meal.

Taji interrupted his labors long enough to let us come into his school's hotel kitchen to learn various facets of the art of Japanese cooking including, of course, the preparation of tempura. We had as our instructor a jovial gentleman named Kan-eyoshi Goto, a superb technician who demonstrated techniques that transcended the usual battered-fried shrimp, vegetables and fish.

TEMPURA

2 egg yolks
2 cups ice water
2 cups plus about three tablespoons flour, sifted
Oil for deep frying

Foods to be deep fried, see below

Salt to taste
Lemon wedges for garnish
A tempura dip (see recipe).

1. Place yolks in a mixing bowl and beat well, preferably with chopsticks.

2. Add the ice water, stirring constantly. When well blended add two cups of flour all at once, stirring, preferably with thick chopsticks. Do not overblend. The batter, when ready, should be fairly lumpy.

3. Heat oil to the depth of about two inches in a utensil suitable for deep frying. When it is very hot but not smoking, add any combination of the ingredients listed below and prepared as indicated. Cook battered-coated dishes until golden but not browned.

4. Lift from the fat and drain on absorbent tissues. As the foods are added and cooked, it is important to skim the surface of the fat to remove any loose bits of batter and particles of food that rise to the top. If the batter seems too thin at any point, sprinkle the surface with a tablespoon of flour and stir briefly leaving it lumpy.

5. Continue cooking until all the foods are deep fried. Sprinkle the tempura lightly with salt and garnish with lemon wedges. Serve with the tempura dip.

Yield: Any number of servings, depending on quantity of foods cooked.

The single essential ingredients of any tempura is shrimp. All the other battered-fried foods are, to use a phrase, side dishes.

Here are a few ingredients that may be dipped in batter and deep fried for the tempura in the recipe above.

SHRIMP: Peel the shrimp tails but leave the last tail segment intact. Make slight gashes in the shrimp at half-inch intervals on the underside. When ready to cook, dip lightly in flour, then in batter and deep fry. Drain and serve hot.

FRESH MUSHROOMS: In Japan there are numerous varieties of wild mushrooms included in an elaborate tempura. They include matsutake or pine tree mushrooms; enokodake, delicate, long-stemmed, white-fleshed mushrooms with a tiny cap, generally fried in bundles, shitake, the large black mushroom caps common in Japanese and Chinese cookery in which, if not available fresh may be soaked from the dried state, squeezed and patted dry. Then may then be floured, dipped in batter and deep fried. Drain and serve hot.

FISH: Almost any white-fleshed, non-oily fish may be cut into bite-size pieces and used. Conger eel, which is quite fatty, is, on the other hand, a frequent addition to tempura. Sometimes the skinless, boneless eel is used, sometimes whole small fillets. Very small fish are frequently used whole while some small fish are sometimes battered, boned and used. All these are dipped in flour, then batter and deep fried, drained and served hot.

ONIONS: Cut onions into half-inch thick slices, skewer with toothpicks to keep the rings intact, flour and batter-fry. Drain and serve hot.

TEMPURA DIP

2 1/2 cups dashi (see recipe)
1/2 cup dark soy sauce available in oriental markets

1/2 cup mirin (sweet sake), available in wine and spirit shops near oriental communities

1 cup well-packed katsubushi, shaved bonito flakes, available in most Japanese grocery stores. Monosodium glutamate (optional)

Grated Japanese white radish (available in oriental markets).

1. Combine the dashi, dark soy sauce and mirin and bring to the boil. Add the katsubushi and stir. Remove from the heat immediately. Let stand about 30 seconds, skimming the surface as necessary. Add a dash of monosodium glutamate and strain. Serve with grated radish on the side so that guests may add their own.

Yield: About 3 1/2 cups.

DASHI

Dashi is one of the basic and broadest foundations of the Japanese kitchen. With very few (if any) exceptions, it is the basis for all Japanese soups that fall into two categories, clear soup or consommé and bean soup. The most basic ingredient for dashi are very thin shavings of dried bonito.

The bonito is a tuna-like fish. The fish, skinned and boned, is frequently dried for two or three years before it is turned into the shavings to make soup.

The best soup stocks, however, are made with dried bonito freshly shaved before using.

The dried bonito and the shavings are known as katsubushi. Katsubushi is widely available in packaged form where Japanese foods are sold.

DASHI OR SOUP STOCK

5 cups cold water

1 large square or rectangle of kombu (kelp) measuring about 7 x 7 inches

3 cups loosely-packed packaged katsubushi, or dried bonito shavings.

1. Place five cups of water in a saucepan and add the kombu. Bring to the boil and immediately remove the seaweed. Do not let the seaweed soak. Add the dried bonito shavings and stir. Remove from the heat immediately. Strain immediately through flannel.

Yield: About five cups.

Christmas cake, dark and light

Compromise Recipe Pleases All Tastes

By MARY MOORE

We have been ingenious. Some like it light. Some like it dark. All want Christmas cake. We compromised. We made both a light and a dark batter. We half-filled the standard loaf pans with dark batter and covered it with light batter to fill the pans. The results are sensational and suit everybody. At today's prices it is a clever method of having both varieties.

As always we take this Christmas cake operation very seriously and can vouch for its excellent quality and flavour and texture.

(generous 10 lbs.)

NOTE: If you want only light cake or only dark cake make the batter of your choice below and double it. There is no baking powder in this cake.

Dark Batter:

5 1/4 c. dark, seedless raisins
1 1/2 c. currants
3/4 c. (1 1/2 two-oz. slices) diced, candied pineapple
3/4 c. red glacé cherries, halved
3/4 c. green glacé cherries, halved
1 1/2 c. chopped mixed candied peel OR mixed fruit cake fruits
1 1/2 c. coarsely-chopped blanched almonds
3/4 c. brandy (OR sherry OR apple juice)
1 1/2 c. butter (room temperature)
1 1/2 c. light brown sugar, packed
6 large eggs

4 1/2 tbsp. molasses
3/4 tsp. vanilla
1 1/2 c. stirred but unsifted all-purpose flour
3/4 tsp. baking soda
1 1/2 tsp. salt
3 tsp. cinnamon
3/4 tsp. ground ginger
3/4 tsp. nutmeg
3/4 tsp. mace
1/4 tsp. cloves

Light Batter:

1/2 c. (2 two-oz. slices) diced, candied pineapple
1 1/2 c. red glacé cherries, halved (1/2 lb.)
1 1/2 c. green glacé cherries, halved (1/2 lb.)
2 1/2 c. light (bleached) raisins (1 lb.)
1 1/2 c. chopped, mixed candied peel OR fruit cake fruit (1/2 lb.)
1/2 c. unsweetened, medium-cut coconut
1 2-3 c. coarsely-chopped blanched almonds (1/2 lb.)
3/4 c. brandy OR sherry OR apple juice
1 c. butter (room temperature)
1 c. granulated sugar
4 large eggs
2 1/2 c. stirred but unsifted all-purpose flour
3/4 tsp. salt
1/2 c. canned, unsweetened pineapple juice
1/2 tsp. pure almond extract.
Using two very large bowls, combine all fruits and nuts for Dark Batter in one of the bowls and for Light Batter in the other bowl. Sprinkle the required measurement of brandy (or sherry or apple juice) in EACH bowl. Toss fruits and nuts thoroughly with the brandy. Cover each bowl and let soak 4 hours or overnight. Label bowls

"DARK" and "LIGHT" to avoid any mix ups. Prepare three standard loaf pans (9x5x2 1/2") with a triple layer of buttered wax paper or double layer of buttered foil.

To make Dark Batter in medium bowl cream together butter and brown sugar until light then beat in eggs until thoroughly blended. Stir in molasses and vanilla. In small bowl combine flour, baking soda, salt and spices then add to creamed mixture combining well. Add this batter to the "DARK" fruit and nuts and combine thoroughly until all fruit is coated with batter. Turn batter equally into the three prepared pans to HALF-FILL, pushing batter down firmly and into corners and smoothing surface.

To make Light Batter in medium bowl cream together the butter and sugar until light, then beat in eggs until well blended. Beat in flour and salt. Stir in juice and almond extract and mix until batter is smooth. Add this batter to the "LIGHT" fruits and nuts and combine thoroughly. Turn batter equally into the 3 pans on top of the dark batter. Push batter down firmly and into corners and smooth tops. THE BATTER WILL COMPLETELY FILL THE THREE LOAF PANS BUT ONLY RISES SLIGHTLY WHEN BAKED. Bake at 275 deg. Fahr. for 2 hrs. and 20 min. with full water pan on bottom rack of oven. Cool, pack off paper and double wrap in plastic bags. Store in refrigerator or freezer. Cold cake slices perfectly.

REOX - For The Treatment of Respiratory Distress

Physicians and hospital authorities have been made aware of the unique advantages of the Reox oxygen separator in the treatment of respiratory ailments.

The Reox 2500 System — What It Is And How It Operates.

The Reox oxygen separator extracts nitrogen, carbon dioxide and water vapour from the air, while permitting the passage of almost pure oxygen. By this means a constant supply of oxygen-enriched air is maintained for an indefinite period. The air reaching the patient through a nasal cannula is approximately 90% oxygen, with 4.5% argon and the remainder nitrogen. The system, housed in an attractive-looking cabinet, operates on standard 110V power — or can be adapted to suit other power requirements.

For The Treatment Of Emphysema, Chronic Bronchitis, Asthma, Bronchiectasis, Cystic Fibrosis

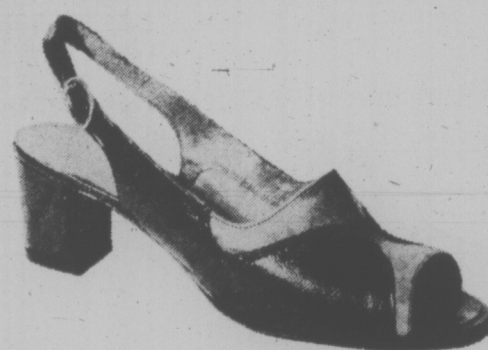

Previously sufferers from severe and chronic respiratory ailments had to be hospitalized for long periods of time. With the introduction of the Reox 2500 unit, the patient can live a more normal life at home. The apparatus is so simple anybody can use it.

U.S. Families Changing Diets

The Washington Post

If the President of the United States and his family are eating fewer steaks and chops because of their high cost, as Mrs. Ford reported at her first press conference, one can imagine what is happening to people who don't have an income of six figures.

Reports of the poor eating pet food, of those on Social Security stealing groceries and of a decrease in the consumption of beef, bear out the fact that the high price of food has made a change in the American diet.

Even the type of cookbooks suddenly popular is indicative of the fact that the high-priced, high-quality foods, like beef, chicken and fish, are being replaced by foods with lower-quality protein and lower price tags such as cheese, eggs, beans, grains and nuts.

Discussions about high-quality (complete) versus low-quality (incomplete) protein turn most people off because they get so technical. But they need not be complicated. Whether a family has reduced meat consumption because of cost or because of potential health hazard, it is important to know what to substitute and still get all the necessary protein.

Frances Moore Lappe author of "Diet for a Small Planet," explains better than anyone else how protein works. Perhaps that's because she is a layman and keeps the explanation simple.

Lappe's first book, which discussed the necessity for changing one's eating habits and how to go about it, sparked general interest in nonmeat diets. Before that, only the faddists seemed to care.

In her newest book, "Great Meatless Meals," written with Ellen Buchman Ewald (Ballantine, $1.50) she offers a simple explanation of proteins and protein combinations.

The basic facts about protein concern its quantity and quality. The quality of protein has to do with how the body can use it.

Protein is made up of 22 amino acids; eight of these are called "essential" because they cannot be manufactured by the body and must come from foods. High-quality protein contains all of these essential amino acids (also called the body's building blocks) in the right proportions; lower-quality protein either does not have the essential amino acids in the right proportions, or is missing one or more of them.

When one food does not contain the proper pattern of amino acids, the body cannot make use of it as well as high-quality protein. But when that food is combined with another food with complementary amino acids, the results is a high-quality protein.

Every food can be rated according to the body's ability to use it. This is called the Net Protein Utilization (NPU).

A person's need for protein depends on body weight and can be calculated easily. For each pound of body weight, 28 grams of usable protein are needed. So a 125-pound woman would need 35.8 grams of usable protein daily.

For the 128-pound woman to meet her daily protein needs she would have to eat any one of the following: 7 1/2 ounces of meat, 3 1/2 ounces of fish, 5 cups of milk, 6 eggs, 1 1/2 cups of dried beans or 12 ounces of nuts.

That's an awful lot of beans or nuts. But if that same woman combined the beans with a complementary protein, she would need a lot less.

Carrots and Parsnips Fall Vegetable Values

By HILDA BEASTALL

Late fall weeks bring a great assortment of vegetables to our kitchens from our own gardens and allotments (if we live in apartments) and on display in the vegetable sections of markets.

When buying, you notice difference in prices so it pays to check two stores on your regular shopping route, remembering quality as well as price.

Celery, priced at 39 cents for a medium size head at one store was found at the next at 21 cents for a pound. The size I wanted cost 20 cents.

Green peppers are priced at 35 cents for one large pepper; or at another store, at 29 cents a pound. You may get a small one for 20 cents.

While these two items are high in vitamins and minerals they are not in the low-priced vegetables, so are used only as flavoring agents with other featured lower priced vegetables. Their vitamins and minerals add to the total value of the meal.

In quantity at reasonable cost, or direct from the garden plot, carrots are versatile; as will be parsnips and yellow turnips.

For something new to most readers, I am giving recipes for pies made from these three low priced vegetables. The fresher they are the higher they rate in the nutrition charts.

Vegetable pies can be considered as Pizza Pies if you like. They are each worked out to be a good source of protein as well as vitamins. They are complete lunch dishes; for a more substantial meal for supper or midday dinner, add a thin layer of minced beef or chopped bacon below the vegetable mixture.

A time-saving method for each pie is to cook sufficient of the vegetable at the previous day's meal. Put aside quantity wanted, and store, covered, in refrigerator until next day.

Keep all vegetable cooking water in glass jar, covered. It is used in the pies too, adding vitamins and flavor lost in cooking.

CARROT PIE

4 cups mashed cooked carrots
1/2-cup grated onion
2 Tbsp margarine, soft
1 small egg
1/2-cup vegetable water
2 Tbsp chopped parsley, chervil or celery leaves
Topping:
1/2 cup dry wholewheat bread crumbs

1/2 cup wheat germ
1 Tbsp soft margarine a little salt
few grains of paprika
Mix pie ingredients in order given, beating with fork. Pour into greased pie plate or shallow casserole. Sprinkle with the chopped parsley or celery leaves.

Then spread the dry bread crumbs and wheat germ over the surface; dot with margarine and sprinkle with paprika. Bake at 400 degs. for about 20 minutes until browned. Serve as suggested; or over hot brown rice with chopped leftover meat added as supper dish.

PARSNIP PIE

4 cups mashed cooked parsnips
One-third cup soft margarine
Salt and paprika
1/2-cup wholewheat bread crumbs
1/2-cup wheat germ
1 small egg
1/2-cup vegetable water
1/2-cup finely chopped green pepper or celery leaves
Mix all in order given. Turn into greased pie plate or shallow casserole. Bake at 350 for 1 1/2 hours. Or, add mashed potato as a topping on the Turnip Pie, sprinkling cheese 45 minutes. Test with clean knife.

Note: the core of older parsnips may be indigestible. Wash and scrub parsnips, do not peel. Cut into pieces for boiling, removing core if thought necessary. Serve pie as suggested.

TURNIP PIE

4-cups mashed, cooked turnip
1/2-cup wholewheat bread crumbs
1/2-cup skim milk powder
1/2-cup vegetable water
1/2-cup grated cheddar cheese
Mix together except cheese. Sprinkle cheese on top. Bake in greased dish at 350 degs. for about 30 minutes until browned. Serve with freshly chopped parsley and young celery leaves.

Note: Young small turnips (yellow) do not need peeling. Just wash and scrub if necessary. Old turnips, large, usually have a rather thick and bitter outer skin. Peel and cut into chunks to boil. Think up your own ways to serve these economical meals. As an alternative to brown rice, place a layer of cooked small macaroni in the dish before adding the vegetable top. They are all good in appearance, flavor and values, and easy on the budget.

Forecast for Thurs., Nov. 7
By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accent is on creative resources, your ability to discard what is useless without foolish sentimental regret. Love enters picture and you find truth about where you stand with "special person." Aquarius, Leo and Scorpio are highlighted.

Elegant and Easy Cheese Souffle

(Serves 3)

3 cups grated cheese
4 to 6 slices bread
2 cups milk or 1 1/2 cups milk and 1/2 cup wine or vermouth
3 eggs, beaten
1/2 teaspoon each salt, Worcestershire, thyme and dry mustard pepper
Layer cheese and bread in an oiled baking dish, starting with bread. Pour over it milk or milk mixture. Beat remaining ingredients together and pour over bread mixture. Let stand for 30 minutes. Bake at 350 degrees for 1 hour in pan of hot water. (In a deep dish it looks like a souffle; in a shallow dish it resembles a quiche.)
1 portion approx. 20 grams of usable protein and 46 to 56 per cent of average daily protein need.
From "Great Meatless Meals," by Lapper Ewald

YOUR HOROSCOPE

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Specifics are demanded. Study Aries message for valid hint. Get facts and work from solid base. Find out about costs, sales figures, results of appraisals. You are going to make changes based on surprise "totals."

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Short trip is indicated. Relative, close neighbor could figure prominently. Home adjustment shows clearly, featuring Taurus, Libra. Your patience probably will be tried by one who whines, scolds the blues. Be gracious, diplomatic, but not gullible.

CANCER (June 21-July 21): Money and how it gets that way—that is likely to be featured. You do some checking and discover loophole. That's fine if you can do something constructive about it. Avoid senseless brooding. Refuse to sell yourself short. Be selective and demand quality. Pisces, Virgo are in picture.

LEO (July 22-Aug. 22): Cycle is high—get going, be a self-starter. Wear bright colors. Be present in a very direct way. Assert yourself. Be creative, confident. Member of opposite sex could profess love. Avoid replying on impulse. Give logic a break!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Accent is on closed-door conference, secrets, some fears, doubts—and an institutional or hospital decision. Cycle is high and there is no need for panic. Delay is temporary. Apparent setback is due to boomerang in your favor. But get some needed moments alone! Meditate.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Friends, desires, romance—these are spotlighted. You get proverbial second chance. Your abilities come to forefront and are appreciated, recognized. Be you, not an imitation or robot. Be individual, direct, an innovator. Then you get top offer!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Time is on your side. Don't be rushed, pushed. Your decisions should be based on analysis, not impulse. Gemini, Virgo persons are in picture. Change is featured and so is variety and an intensified relationship. Quite a time!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Health, work, need for a more peaceful environment—these are featured. Be gracious without abandoning principles. Taurus, Libra play roles that affect your welfare. Accent is on what is basic, your real needs and your recognition of quality as opposed to pretentious sham.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are spiritual, introspective, difficult to live with because of perfectionist tendencies. May was important and soon your scattered forces will jell. You are going to be on more solid footing. Pisces, Virgo persons play key roles in your life. April of 1973 is a money month!

The best to you

Bread, Cereals Nutrition Bargains

Today's consumer is faced with a tremendous choice when buying breads and cereals. When you consider the great array of breakfast cereals of various degrees of refinement and breads and pastries both plain and fancy the choice is indeed difficult, especially when you wish to obtain maximum value from your food dollar. To make a wise and economical decision it is helpful to know certain facts.

Whole grain cereals such as cracked wheat and rolled oats provide good food value for the money. Refined cereals which include farina and most ready-to-eat cereals, may be enriched with thiamine, riboflavin, niacin and iron. Before buying refined breakfast cereals, carefully check the labels for food value, weight and cost. Usually, the more a cereal is processed, the more it costs. Ready-to-serve, and sugar-coated cereals and those packaged in individual portions are generally higher priced. Uncooked cereals are available in quick-cooking or instant and regular form.

Both uncooked and ready-to-eat cereals may have added food value in the form of vitamins and minerals or wheat germ.

Bread, an indispensable food, is very economical when you consider its nutritive value. White bread enriched with thiamine, riboflavin, niacin and iron has about the same nutritive value as whole wheat bread. Nearly all white bread is enriched so check the label carefully before buying. Specialty breads, such as fruit, cheese and cinnamon, usually demand a higher price than white or whole wheat bread. If you have a freezer, buy extra bread when it is on sale. Wasted food is expensive food so rather than throw stale bread out, use it in dressings, puddings, for toast or for crumbs for toppings and coatings. Day-old bread is sometimes cheaper than fresh bread and can be freshened by heating it for five minutes at 350 degree F in a damp paper bag. Large loaves of bread often are a better buy than small ones. The type of wrapping may also determine the cost of the bread.

The Canada Food Guide recommends that you eat bread with butter or fortified margarine and one serving of whole grain cereal each day.

Wiggles Give Willies

DEAR ABBY: I know this sounds like a silly problem, but your answer would mean so much to me.

A friend and I often fish together and we both enjoy it. That is, I do until it comes time to clean the fish. My friend then proceeds to fillet the fish while they are still alive and wriggling.

This bothers me, but my friend assures me that fish have no feelings, I think they have.

Who is right? Sorry for fish.

DEAR SORRY: I checked with the Fish and Wildlife Department of the University of Minnesota, and their spokesman, Dr. Thomas Waters (so help me) said: "Since fish do have nervous systems, they also have feelings. However, it's impossible to say whether the pain a fish feels is the same kind of pain humans experience."

So tell your impatient friend that you aren't buying his fish story, hook, line and sinker, and he should wait until the fish is dead before he fillets it.

DEAR ABBY: My wife and I have been married a year. We were very happy until last week.

It all started when she bought a pants suit for $150 (I make barely $100 a week). I told her to take it back. We argued a while and she refused to return it. The next day I took it back.

That evening when I came home for dinner, my wife was standing in the kitchen naked, preparing supper.

I asked her why she was naked, and she said, "Because I don't have anything to wear." Then it dawned on me what she was trying to get across, but I just ignored her.

I never said another word about her being naked, which begged her. All during the meal she would bump my arm. When she got up to get the coffee she shoved my chair. Finally she "accidentally" hit me in the head with the coffee pot. That's when I turned her over my knee and gave her a good spanking on her bare fanny. I figured if she was going to act like a child, I'd treat her like one.

She's not talking to me now. Was I wrong? The Spanker.

DEAR SPANKER: Yes. Fighting fire with fire won't solve anything, so knock off the spanking, and tell her to cut out the bumping and knocking. Your wife needs to learn how to live on your salary. And if it's insufficient for her extras, maybe she should get a job.

MPs Erupt Over Speaker Ruling

By VICTOR MACKIE
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — A storm broke in the Commons provoking the first uproar of the new session when two members of the cabinet challenged a ruling by Speaker James Jerome Tuesday.

Opposition members quickly rallied to his support denouncing the government for questioning the authority of the chief officer of the house and trying to "pressure" him to change his mind.

Temper flared. It was the first major showdown of the new parliament between the cabinet and Speaker Jerome.

Accusations that the government was "publicly chastising" Mr. Speaker and attempting to "trammel on the rights of parliament" were hurled at the front benches of the government from opposition members.

Involved in the heated wrangle were Government House Leader Mitchell Sharp, Finance Minister John Turner and several opposition members including veteran parliamentarians John Diefenbaker and Stanley Knowles.

The verbal battle flared after the question period had ended. The Progressive Conservatives and New Democratic Party joined to defend the Speaker from what they regarded as an "attack" by the government on the chair.

Sharp and Turner backed off as the row threatened to develop into a vocal donnybrook.

Precipitating the heated exchange was Joe Guay, parliamentary secretary to the minister of regional expansion. The Liberal MP for St. Boniface, said he had been trying to ask a question for several days.

Speaker Jerome said this gave him an opportunity to explain that he had decided parliamentary secretaries should not take up the time of the house asking questions. He had been a parliamentary secretary for two years. It is a position that placed them above ordinary MP's. They have special recognition, prestige and advantages.

They have the obligation of answering questions, occasionally in the house. They should not also have the privilege of asking questions. The Speaker ruled.

Sharp objected. He said parliamentary secretaries when appointed had not been aware they would not be permitted to ask questions. He said it was a question that deserved further consideration.

There were irate protests from the opposition members. They said the government house leader was in effect challenging the Speaker's ruling.

Turner said he agreed with Sharp. He suggested before Mr. Speaker made a "definite ruling" he should hear arguments.

Speaker Jerome interrupted to say the house was getting into a question of fundamental importance. The principle of the conduct of the house was now at stake.

However he said having made the ruling he would be prepared "at another time" to listen to members express their opinions if the members wished it that way.

Turner persisted in trying to speak.

"Sit down and shut up," said opposition members heatedly, pointing out Mr. Speaker was on his feet. Members in the house must resume their seats when Mr. Speaker is on his feet.

"You are impertinent John" shouted Walter Baker PC, Grenville Carleton.

Former Prime Minister John Diefenbaker paid tribute to Speaker Jerome. He said he had performed his duties in a manner that had done credit to the speaker and to parliament.

"I deeply resent the attitude of ministers of the crown, activated and encouraged by the prime minister, who should be upholding parliament. The ruling is made, it stands."

Prairie Tory Seeks Noose For Those Who Kill Twice

OTTAWA (CP) — A Progressive Conservative MP got nowhere Tuesday with a suggestion that the government consider bringing back hanging for persons who are twice convicted of murder.

Eldon Woolliams (PC, Calgary North) brought the matter up after another conservative raised the question of convicted murderers "getting leaves from penitentiaries."

Trudeau gave no direct response.

Woolliams asked for a change in the law so that "anybody who is convicted of a second offence of murder and gets life it will mean life and he is taken out of our society, or, in the alternative, will he (prime minister) bring back capital punishment in respect to those persons who are convicted or murder twice in a row."

Under present law capital punishment can be used only against convicted murderers of police officers and prison guards.

Woolliams, long a critic of the temporary absence system used by the penitentiary service, raised the matter after it was introduced by a newer critic of the same thing Sean O'Sullivan (PC, Hamilton Westnorth).

O'Sullivan mentioned the case of Roy D. Kully, 31, convicted twice of murder, once for a killing he committed when he escaped custody in 1972.

Kully, now serving two life terms, fled a local theatre when rehearsing for a children's play. He had received a pass, despite the fact that he was serving life for a 1965 sex-slashing of a five-year-old girl.

He was sentenced earlier this year to the second life sentence for killing a man while on that leave and he appeared in Kingston, Ont., Court again last month in connection with some lesser offences.

★ THE ROGERS' CHRISTMAS CAKE RECIPE

This one you'll keep for years.

If your old Christmas cake recipe seems a little tired, this year try a new tradition. The Rogers' Golden West Fruit Cake. Chosen from thousands entered in Rogers' Recipe Contest. The unique baking qualities of Rogers' Golden Syrup give it a rare, rich flavour—and will help keep it moist, fresher, longer. Try it, and we think you'll keep it for next year. And for years after.

Rogers' Golden West Fruit Cake

- | | |
|---------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------|
| 1 cup dried apricots | 1 cup shortening |
| 2 cups golden raisins | 1/4 cup butter |
| 2 cups dark raisins | 1 1/4 cups ROGERS' GOLDEN SYRUP |
| 1 cup (8 ounces) halved candied cherries | 6 large eggs |
| 2 cups (16 ounces) diced mixed candied fruits and peels | 2 1/2 cups sifted all-purpose flour |
| 12 ounces candied pineapple, diced | 1 teaspoon baking powder |
| 8 ounces sliced almonds | 1 teaspoon salt |
| | 1 teaspoon cinnamon |
| | 1/2 teaspoon ground cloves |

Line an 8" x 8" x 3 1/2" fruit cake pan with three thicknesses of brown paper and grease inside shell. Cover apricots with boiling water and let stand 5 minutes. Drain and using scissors, cut apricots in slices. Combine apricots, raisins, candied fruits and nuts. Mix thoroughly. Cream together shortening, butter and ROGERS' GOLDEN SYRUP. Beat in eggs, one at a time. Sift together flour, baking powder, salt and spices. Blend into creamed mixture. Stir in fruits and nuts, mixing well. Spoon into prepared pan. Bake in slow oven, 250°F. (with shallow pan of hot water on floor of oven) for about 4 hours. Makes about 7 pounds of fruit cake.

Note: Make several weeks before use. Wrap and store. This will give the cake a mellow flavour and it will slice easily.

Freight Cost: No Changes

OTTAWA (CP) — Justice Minister Otto Lang, the minister who reports to parliament on the Wheat Board, said there is no intention by the government to introduce legislation repealing or amending the Crownstest Pass rates in the present session.

The question was raised by Doug Neil (PC, Moose Jaw). He noted that the minister in response to questions earlier in this session had said that any changes in the Crownstest Pass—freight rates in the months ahead would require legislation.

He asked if the minister plans during the present session either to repeal or amend the Crownstest Pass freight rates.

Amnesty Extended

MANILA (AP) — President Ferdinand Marcos of the Philippines extended amnesty Sunday to leaders and officers of subversive movements, including the Philippine Communist party. The Philippines and China are expected to establish diplomatic relations soon, and Marcos' move apparently was aimed at pleasing Peking.

PLO Fears Missing Lieutenant

Washington Post
BEIRUT — The number two man in Yasser Arafat's Fatah Palestinian guerrilla organization is missing, amid reliable reports there that more than a dozen men personally loyal to him have been arrested in Morocco on charges of plotting to kill Jordan's King Hussein during last month's Arab summit conference.

Arab and western sources report that Arafat's chief lieutenant in Fatah, Salah Khalaf, who is also known as Abu Iyad, was last seen in Beirut on Oct. 20. He is known to have travelled to Libya around that date, and has disappeared from view since.

Khalaf has been identified by Western intelligence services as one of the heads of the Black September terrorist organization, which staged the Munich massacre in 1972 and was responsible for the killing of two American diplomats in Khartoum in 1973.

Although Arafat's aides have issued denials that any Palestinians were involved in a plot at Rabat, reliable Arab sources said that Arafat and his followers are in fact deeply concerned by Khalaf's disappearance.

They are preparing for what they hope will be a major international triumph by appearing at the United Nations debate on the Palestinian question, which begins Nov. 13 in New York.

A new terrorist assault before or during the debate could totally discredit the moderates of the guerrilla movement, which is trying to refute Israeli charges that Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization is responsible for terrorism.

Arafat is reported to feel that other dissident Palestinians will obey orders not to stage terror acts during this period. But Khalaf has an independent power base within the Palestinian movement, and if he is still in Libya he might be able to count on the support of Col. Muammar Qaddafi for an operation that would mar Arab efforts for a peaceful settlement with Israel, Arab analysts say.

Khalaf publicly supported Arafat's new moderate position earlier this year. But he began to edge away from Arafat in July when he apparently sensed that Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and other Arab leaders would be successful in arranging a reconciliation between Arafat and King Hussein at the Rabat meeting.

Khalaf was imprisoned by the Jordanians during the bloody civil war in Jordan in 1970. "Hussein is one subject that Abu Iyad can not be objective about," one Palestinian source said guardedly Monday when asked about reports on the guerrilla chief's involvement in the Rabat plot.

Moroccan authorities first leaked word on Oct. 22 that they had foiled a plan to kill Hussein at the Rabat summit. News agencies reported that 11 Palestinians had been arrested three weeks earlier.

The arrests, and the identification of the guerrillas as operatives close to Khalaf, has been confirmed now by responsible western sources.

Khalaf apparently slipped out of Beirut quickly after learning around Oct. 20 that Fatah's intelligence arm, which was once under his control, had been ordered to keep him under surveillance.

Morocco's King Hassan II is reported to have informed Arafat of the results of a "thorough" interrogation of the arrested guerrillas shortly before the summit conference opened on Oct. 23. Arafat is said to have refused to believe that Khalaf was involved until the king ticked off the names of the detainees.

While Hussein was to have been the primary target of the PLO, news agency reports from Rabat have said the Moroccan authorities discovered that President Sadat and other Arab leaders were also listed as possible targets.

The drinking driver is as much a criminal as the drug addict and is costing as much, says deputy attorney-general David Vickers.

Noting heroin addicts spend $250 million a year to support their habit, he said in an interview the cost of drinking driving and alcoholism are "of the same enormous proportions."

"To say they cost as much as the heroin bill is deadly accurate," he said.

Vickers said up to one third of the cases being heard in provincial courts stemmed from drinking driving.

"If we got rid of alcohol or drug-related crimes we would cut back our court cases by 50 to 60 per cent."

He said it was a "community responsibility" to find a solution.

"What we have here is really a social problem. It is a question of assessing standards and values in each community. It is a question of morality."

He said the "crunch" will come when people begin to realize the drinking driver is a criminal and should be treated as such.

UVic Gets Book Stack

A 200-book collection has been donated to the University of Victoria in memory of Dr. Clifford Carl, a former director of the Provincial Museum, who died in 1970.

The collection was given by the Friends of the Provincial Museum. It contains a selection of biology books, primarily in the area of vertebrate zoology.

Extra Senses Common

NEW YORK (AP) — Many people may have the ability to receive and send information in a way other than by the known normal senses, two physicists report.

Their experiments, including tests with Uri Geller, the Israeli magician and purported psychic, suggest the existence of one or more unidentified ways of learning things.

"It may be that remote perceptual ability is widely distributed in the general population, but because the perception is generally below an individual's level of awareness, it is repressed or not noticed," Dr. Harold Puthoff and Russell Targ of Stanford Research Institute, Menlo Park, Calif., wrote in Nature, the British scientific journal.

In several experiments, Geller was isolated in a sealed room with metal walls blocking out all sights, sounds and electrical impulses.

Geller repeatedly came up with right responses with scores far higher than by chance, Puthoff and Targ said.

In one case, in calling which face of a die would be uppermost after being shaken, Geller was right in eight out of eight calls of the number. Experimenters who shook the die inside a steel box didn't know which number was uppermost, so couldn't transmit the information by some kind of telepathy.

REPRODUCED DRAWINGS

Geller was asked to reproduce 13 drawings while physically separated from his experimenters. He did not know who made the drawing, who selected it for him to reproduce or how it was selected.

Drawings included a firecracker, a cluster of grapes, a devil, a horse, the solar system, a tree and an envelope.

Geller's drawings all showed some degree of correspondence to the pictures and most showed remarkable similarity.

But he was not successful in experiments involving 100 target pictures of everyday objects, sealed in double envelopes. The object was to determine whether direct perception of the envelope contents was possible without some person knowing which particular picture Geller was trying to reproduce. Each day over three days, Geller passed or declined to associate any envelope with a drawing he had made.

In another experiment, Pat Price, a former California police commissioner, perceived outdoor scenes many miles from their physical location, with neither Price nor the experimenters knowing the location in advance.

No Modern Conveniences . . . But All He Wants Are Flowers

LARDEAU, B.C. (CPV) — There's no power, running water, telephone, television, or car at Teddy Evans' farm.

He has no horse, cow, dog or kitten. But he does have his flowers and that's all he ever wanted.

"I'm an Englishman—that's why I'm crazy about flowers," explained Mr. Evans, 86.

For 61 years he has lived alone on his farm in the tiny sheltered valley near the isolated Lardeau River in the West Kootenay, in south-eastern B.C. A narrow gravel road links him with the nearest town, Kaslo, 35 miles south.

He has some groceries delivered twice a year but he makes or grows everything else he needs.

"All my life, I've liked to be alone," he said. "When I came here, most people thought I was crazy and maybe I was. But there are different kinds of lunatics."

He left Liverpool when his parents suggested he work in a hat factory in northern England. He found a railroad job and worked the branch line along the Lardeau River.

That's how he came to buy his 40-acre spread with its spectacular view of the Selkirk Mountains.

"The whole place had been badly burned by a forest fire and it didn't look anything like it does now," said Mr. Evans. "But I had to stay because of the railroad job."

Today there are meadows, an orchard, flower beds, vegetable gardens, stone walls, fences and several buildings made of logs.

The only assistance he had was from his father, who died years ago at the age of 92, and a horse he no longer has.

"The soil's not too good here, but there's a little creek that brings down silt every spring," said Mr. Evans. "So I built a catch basin and in the fall when the creek dried up a bit, I hauled the silt over to the farm."

His first home was a small cabin which burned down in the 1920s. Then he built a spacious two-storey house with glassed-in porch.

He began building the house during the summer of 1928, using his horse to haul trees to the site. He moved into it during the fall of 1929 and finished the inside that winter.

The kitchen contains a cast-iron wood stove and a coal-oil lamp. Water comes from the creek via a length of plastic pipe, but in winter he must melt snow. His furniture is handmade.

He began growing tulips commercially in the 1920s and continued until his retirement at the end of the Second World War. He sold his bulbs but couldn't market the flowers because the only transportation was a once-a-week train.

He got his original bulbs from Holland and added more every year. His old records, written in a perfect cursive hand reveal he once grew 100 varieties of tulips, 85 kinds of narcissus and all kinds of irises and crocuses.

His business peaked during the war when Dutch bulbs were unavailable. He worked alone and his acres of flowers—2,000 tulips to a row—required constant attention.

One problem was mule deer eating the tulips.

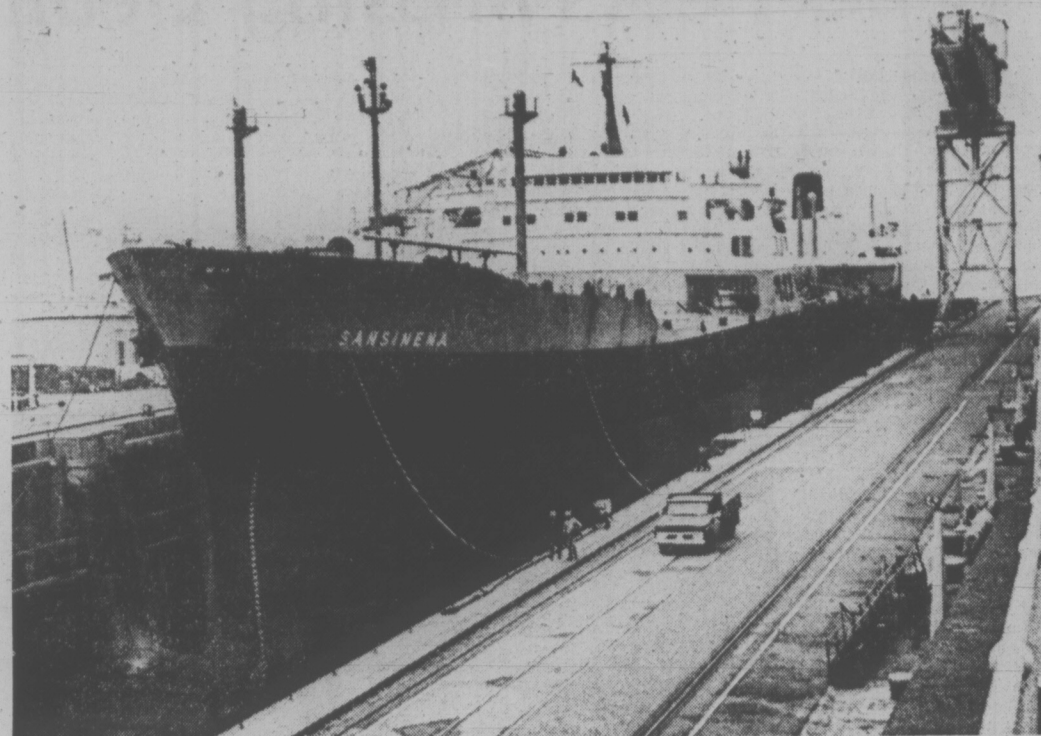

"They started on one end of the field and worked their way right across," said Mr. Evans. "In the end I had to shoot them."

Mr. Evans still tends a vegetable garden and masses of flower beds. He has a root cellar and grows so many vegetables that he gives many away.

Cooking is not one of his talents and he was too busy with his flowers to get married.

He has friends and relatives living close by who keep an eye on him. In recent years they have cut his hay, chopped wood and re-roofed his house.

Mr. Evans said he will stay on his farm until he dies and he has no patience with people trying to buy him out.

Marketing Law Draws Attacks

Opposition members continued to hammer away at the government's new marketing legislation Tuesday, in more than six hours of debate.

All three opposition parties criticized the new Natural Products Marketing Act but attacked it from different viewpoints.

Liberal MLA Garde Gardom (Vancouver-Point Grey) called the superboard created to oversee all commodity marketing boards—in B.C. "doctrinaire socialism at its worst."

Marketing boards should be the subject of public plebiscites, he said, and if the public says the boards are not acting in the interest of the community they should be "thrown out."

Secord Ed Smith (North Peace River) said there is no guarantee the bill will do anything to insure farmers a better return for their product.

It's a "phony" bill, he said, which attempts to find an easy solution to a complex problem.

The legislation creates a new provincial marketing board with authority over all commodity boards in the province and provision for appeals by all members of the community.

In a lengthy criticism of the bill, Liberal Allan Williams (West Vancouver-Howe Sound) challenged the government to send the legislation to the legislature's all-party committee on agriculture for further study.

The committee could then receive representations from all groups interested and affected by the boards and make recommendations for changing the bill to "better serve all the people in this province."

Williams' main argument is that the bill does not directly or clearly give any bargaining power to consumers.

The "superboard" will be made up of cabinet appointees, he said, but the legislation does not specify the appointees.

Conservative leader Scott Wallace also called for further study of marketing problems before any new legislation is passed.

Consumers should be guaranteed a place on the board, he said.

Wallace also blasted what he says are "dangerous powers" granted to the board by the legislation.

"It's Orwellian," said Wallace.

Secord Harvey Schroeder (Chilliwack) argued that the bill will constitute a "conflict of interest since the government itself is now involved in marketing products in B.C."

Mines Minister Leo Nimick said lengthy debate by the opposition on the bill was an attempt "to take us back" to marketing procedures of the 30s.

"The consumer," he said, "has never been taken into consideration—he's been a victim at every turn of the road. Problems are all based, also, on the farmer not getting sufficient funds."

He described the purpose of the legislation as an attempt to create "sort of an ombudsman" and "a sincere attempt to correct wrongdoings" in the commodity market.

The government, he said, was "trying to put a plastic band on the system you people (the previous Secord government) helped to continue."

"These changes are going to come whether you like it or not."

Brochures Bounced

Tourist promotion brochures will no longer be carried on B.C. Ferries, Transport Minister Bob Strachan said Tuesday.

Because of constant pressure from commercial interests for the ferries to carry "this, that and every other thing," policy has been changed and no brochures will be available on the vessels, he said.

Strachan was answering a question by Secord MLA Bob McClelland who charged B.C. Ferries were "discriminating against Canadian brochures."

The Langley member said B.C. Horseman Magazine was dropped from racks about a year ago.

Strachan, however, said it was the "complete reverse." We've encouraged B.C. and Canadian publications.

Salesman Sentenced

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Carter Gordon, 35, a bonds salesman, was sentenced Monday to one to five years in prison for the traffic accident that took the life of Clair Cox, 27, and cost her escort, actor James Stacey, his left arm and leg. Stacey and Miss Cox were riding a motorcycle when the accident occurred Sept. 28, 1973. Gordon pleaded no contest to manslaughter and drunk driving charges.

ICBC Criticism 'False'

Transport Minister Strachan is weary of answering opposition charges about the Insurance Corporation of B.C. because so far they have all been "erroneous, misleading or false."

Secord MLA Don Phillips asked the minister during question period in the legislature Tuesday whether there was any truth to reports that ICBC start-up costs were $40 million more than the $19 million originally estimated. Strachan countered that land acquisition for ICBC outlets was "rarely" included in estimates of total expenditure.

Phillips was referring to an "internal" report of the corporation prepared last July.

He refused to circulate the report, saying, "We'll be asking more questions about it as time goes on."

He said the report indicated also that by July 31, ICBC had spent 65 per cent of total operating estimate of $40.2 million, and "the people have a right to know about a public corporation."

Strachan said the report was probably "just another leaked computer feed-out" that doesn't represent the total picture.

He said the Opposition would have to wait until the annual report for answers.

OILMEN DEVELOPING OWN SPILL PLANS

OTTAWA (CP) — The oil industry is developing its own contingency plan to deal with the growing marine oil spill problem, K. R. Evans, a Gulf Oil of Canada executive, said today.

He told a marine pollution conference that the plan will soon be presented to the Petroleum Association for Care of Environment (PACE) for approval.

Once the plan is accepted the industry should be able to work more effectively with the transport department in cleaning up oil spills, Evans said. He is co-ordinator of oil spill contingency planning for Gulf Oil.

About 250 shipping and oil industry representatives and government officials are attending the two-day conference. The meeting, organized by the transport department, is discussing ways of improving anti-pollution methods.

Earlier, Roy Illing, marine administrator for the transport department, said that with 300 oil supertankers on order, the oil pollution problem is growing. These ships weigh more than 150,000 tons.

M. S. Greenham, the department's senior marine emergency officer, said the new supertankers do not replace smaller ships which are needed to carry the oil cargo further inland.

Evans said that under the proposed PACE plan member oil companies would be responsible for cleaning up their own messes. But other members could be called on to help if needed.

Each oil tanker would have its own contingency plan.

There would be close co-ordination of industry efforts with the federal government.

The oil industry began developing this plan in 1972 to mesh its efforts with those of various government agencies involved in oil spill cleanups.

Canada Eyes $200M Worth Of Brazil Cars

OTTAWA (UPI) — Canada is studying the purchase of $200 million worth of Brazilian-built specialized armored vehicles aimed chiefly at use in overseas peacekeeping duties.

Supply and Services Minister Jean-Pierre Goyer said Canada has been shopping in Brazil, the United States and France for the special cars, but New Democrat Jean Rodriguez said he has learned Canada is interested mainly in the Brazilian models.

Goyer said he did not expect any contracts to be signed before December. The purchases hinge on any cutbacks that may be made in the forthcoming defence department budget.

Rodriguez raised the matter in the House of Commons recently and Defence Minister James Richardson said then, "we are not in any such negotiations that would be nearing a purchase."

Andrew Brewin, another New Democrat, expressed concern over the possible deal.

He asked Richardson if he was "aware that Brazil is governed by a military dictatorship and that many other countries in South America would view such purchases with very grave apprehension?"

He also asked Richardson whether he had consulted with External Affairs Minister Allan MacEachen about the impact of such a purchase and whether this meant Canada would be providing Brazil with military supplies.

"The negotiations in this respect are not at a stage where it would be necessary for me to consult with the Secretary of State for External Affairs," Richardson replied.

A British publication, Latin America, reported two weeks ago Canada had sent a delegation to Brazil in July to look at the hardware.

It said the Canadians were particularly interested in two vehicles, a wheeled reconnaissance vehicle which has each wheel operating independently, and another which could serve as an amphibious carrier for 14 men or an armoured car with a 90 millimetre cannon or a 7.2 millimetre machine gun.

Defence department officials said such vehicles would be used for overseas Canadian peacekeeping operations.

The issue has aroused concern in some quarters that such a purchase would amount to Canada's helping Brazil strengthen its military industrial complex.

"To even consider helping to build up the military regime in Brazil at this time is ridiculous," Rodriguez said.

Rodriguez said Brazil's military strength was growing and he noted the country's buildup of new paved highways to frontier areas, "ostensibly to bring people into the interior, closer to farmland, but in fact to strengthen its military forces along the border."

Several Latin American countries, including Argentina and Peru, reportedly have expressed concern over the rate of growth of Brazil's military strength.

Rodriguez also questioned allocation of $300 million to a military acquisition that apparently would not have any primary use domestically.

He favored increased trade with South America but added, "I don't see the priority of the government spending $200 million on something that produces nothing."

"The government could be using this money to build more houses. Maybe they'll use the armored cars to keep (Canada's) native people in line," he said drily.

Meanwhile, Canada is actively pursuing expansion of trade with Brazil and Trade Minister Alastair Gillespie only recently returned from leading a trade mission to the country.

Gillespie said he was aware of Canada's military interest in the armored vehicles, but said his discussions with Brazilian officials did not deal with the matter.

Grape Clippers Busy All Over Europe

LONDON (UPI) — All over Europe lorries and tractors have been hauling wagon loads of grapes to the wine presses the past few weeks and women of all ages have been clipping the valuable fruit of the vine.

From Champagne in Northern France to Apulia in Southern Italy the harvest has been gathered, sometimes in an atmosphere of festivity such as the splendid Vendimia, the Jerez celebration that goes on for a week, night and day, before the sherry grapes are picked.

Quantity and quality are expected to vary in different countries, but all the indications are that the quantity will be about average and the quality satisfactory if the late rain during the harvest in some places has not done major damage.

Hopes for a declaration of a 1974 port vintage are high, and the conditions for sherry are good in Spain. Both countries enjoyed fine weather during the summer, and in Portugal it was described as being similar to that of 1896, one of the greatest years for port.

In France a large crop is expected, only 10 per cent less than last year's all-time record. There were long periods of hot and dry weather in Bordeaux and Burgundy in July and August. The maturing of the grapes was accordingly slowed, by the lack of rain, and cold weather at the end of April in Burgundy hindered the formation of the bunches of berries.

TORONTO (CP) — RCMP Supt. Tom Verner said that organized crime has expanded its loan shark rackets in Ontario.

Supt. Genger said on the CBC television program Rogers Report that the RCMP knows of one operation with $1 million in circulation and several others "could be bigger or smaller."

The exorbitant interest rates in loan-sharking, which he said provide "major sources of income" to funnel into other "illegal activities, cannot be checked by law since it is not a Criminal Code offence.

Morton Shulman, New Democratic Party member of the Ontario legislature for High Park, said on the same program that the increase in loan-sharking here is due to rival Detroit Mafia families moving in after a Buffalo Mafia group lost control.

Dr. Shulman said the typical loan shark lends $500 and demands $600 a month later. If a payment is missed, he charges $760 until "a $500 loan at the end of a year is up to approximately $4,000."

CONTAMINATED FEED CATTLE TOLL RISES

LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Michigan state agricultural officials have ordered the slaughter of up to 5,000 more beef and dairy cattle which consumed feed contaminated with a fire retardant.

State officials said they acted after the U.S. Food and Drug Administration dropped the maximum amount of the substance allowed in meat, poultry and milk from one part per million to three-tenths part per million. Researchers said they found a pattern of brain and liver defects, cleft palates and sub-normal weights in white mice born to mothers fed the bromine compound in large doses during pregnancy.

The doses fed laboratory animals were many times the trace levels found in suspect meat, poultry, milk and eggs which may have been eaten by consumers over the past 17 months, although some of the cattle previously destroyed gave birth to sickly or still-born calves after consuming the contaminated food.

So far 9,000 cattle have been killed and farmers also destroyed 1.5 million eggs, 900,000 chickens, 2,300 hogs, 1,000 pheasants, 348 sheep, 10,000 pounds of cheese and 351 tons of contaminated feed.

Prices Match Wages

VANCOUVER (CP) — Food prices are higher in Vancouver than in Ottawa because wages are higher here, a spokesman for Canada Safeway Ltd. said.

Salaries in the Vancouver area are higher not only on the manufacturing and producing end, but also at the retail level, the spokesman said.

The Safeway spokesman's comments follow a statement by federal Consumer and Corporate Affairs Minister Andre Ouellet Friday that prices for essential commodities are higher in Vancouver than in Ottawa, Toronto and elsewhere.

Ouellet went on a shopping tour with MP Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway) in Vancouver Friday, and found that steak prices at $1.98 a pound in Ottawa cost $2.99 a pound here.

Grade A medium eggs cost 83 cents a dozen here, compared with 59 cents a dozen in Ottawa, he said.

He suggested that part of the reason for the lower prices in Ottawa was an experimental program there conducted by the Food Prices Review Board.

It involves weekly publication of food prices in stores throughout Ottawa. The minister said that before the program started there was a difference of as much as 19 per cent in the prices of certain commodities in different stores.

The Safeway spokesman said a general Safeway clerk working 40 hours a week in Vancouver makes $5.95 an hour, compared with $4.66 an hour in Ottawa. She said checkers here also make higher wages than their Ottawa counterparts. She did not have comparative figures available.

The Safeway spokesman said it was critical that Ouellet make his across-the-country check at exactly the same time, not a week apart, for an accurate account of price variation.

Bond Fraud Trial

AUSTIN, Tex. (AP) — A man who has pleaded guilty to counterfeiting millions of dollars of Canadian bonds says "maybe more" than 1,000 bonds were run off on a printing press but only about 20 were "good enough to use."

Elmer Cox, 52, of nearby Round Rock, testified as the first witness in the case against Scottie Muckelthart, 45, of Bellaire, and James Renton, 37, of Dallas.

Cox was indicted but pleaded guilty and is not on trial. Cox also was charged in the shooting of B. C. Lancaster, an indicted co-conspirator in the case, on Feb. 25 at an Austin apartment building.

The alleged counterfeit bond scheme was uncovered when two $100,000 Bank of Canada bonds were found in Lancaster's car, said Secret Service agent Charles Kunkel.

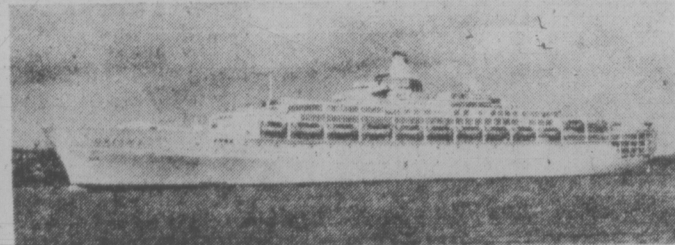

EVADERS LISTED

VANCOUVER (CP) — A spokesman for the Committee to Aid American War Objectors said a list has been received at the committee's office here giving the names of persons still wanted in the U.S. for draft evasion.

Larry Martin said the committee has received a list of 5,755 names compiled by the American Civil Liberties Union and the United Church of Christ of draft evaders still wanted in the U.S.

He said of those on the list 2,657 could be indicted if they returned to the U.S.

Sadat Gives Kissinger Vote of Confidence

CAIRO (AP) — President Anwar Sadat indicated today that Egypt is ready to go ahead with negotiations with the U.S. State Secretary Kissinger for another Israeli withdrawal in the Sinai desert.

"We shall in Egypt always be ready to regain whatever land we can," Sadat said when asked if such negotiations depended on parallel talks being held concerning Israel's withdrawal from the west bank of the Jordan River.

Sadat met reporters after a two-hour meeting with Kissinger.

"As you know," Sadat said, "I have fullest confidence in Dr. Kissinger, and we support his continuing efforts to achieve a just and lasting peace in the Middle East."

Kissinger told reporters earlier he hoped "to make a breakthrough" that would open the way to new negotiations, but "the situation is complicated."

Kissinger's previous idea was a pair of simultaneous negotiations—between Israel and Egypt for a Sinai withdrawal, and between Israel and Jordan for a west bank withdrawal. But the Arab summit conference last week torpedoed that with its recognition of the Palestine Liberation Organization PLO as the future government of an independent Palestinian state on the west bank.

King Hussein of Jordan said because of that action, he could no longer negotiate for the future of the west bank. And Israel reiterated that it will never deal with the guerrillas of the PLO.

Young Urges Sugar Boycott

People in British Columbia should boycott sugar in order to force down its price, says Consumer Services Minister Phyllis Young.

By continuing to buy sugar and stockpiling it in the event the price should soar even higher, people are feeding into the hands of those who speculate on the sugar futures market, she said in an interview Tuesday.

"I think that the consumers should do the exact opposite, they should boycott the purchase of sugar and let the speculators lose their shirts," Young said.

The minister said the problem of rising sugar prices is an international problem.

"I think we're being manipulated... by a bunch of speculators speculating in the futures commodity market in sugar."

She said people should learn to cut back on the use of sugar. She admitted to having a two-pound bag of sugar for more than two years "and it is half empty."

In Vancouver a spokesman for the British Columbia Sugar Refining Co. Ltd. said Canadians pay more for sugar than Americans because the two countries obtain their supplies differently.

Student Hustlers Queue to Cue Up

DETROIT (UPI) — John De Putron is no Minnesota Fats, but he still can give the sharks in Phys Ed 138 a few pointers about pool.

De Putron teaches the course at Wayne State University.

He calls it pocket billiards and anyone passing receives one credit hour and a few tricks to try out at the corner lounge.

The course is so popular students are queuing up to cue up.

That kind of talk sometimes goes over the heads of less talented sharpies among his 45 students, so De Putron sometimes finds himself putting it a little less delicately.

"Honey," he told one co-ed, "you're holding the cue all wrong."

De Putron conducts the class at the university's student centre pool room and starts each class with a brief English.

De Putron said he learned to shoot pool while playing hooky from school in Philadelphia.

He was invited to teach at Wayne State after the head of the physical education department there saw him play in a Detroit private club.

After one class, one of the hotshots often will challenge De Putron to a game. He usually "puts" down the upstarts but he concedes it is getting tougher.

"I don't see as sharp as I used to," he said. "But I refuse to wear glasses at the table. If I did, I would think I was getting old."

Booze Baron's Lady Scorns 'Paltry' $1M

NEW YORK — Edgar Bronfman, president of the world's largest distilling company, is suing for annulment of his marriage to Lady Caroline Townshend, direct descendant of the man whose tea tax on the British colonies was a prime cause of the American revolution.

Bronfman told Judge Jacob Grumet in State Supreme Court Monday that Lady Caroline "had a hangup about sex and could not sleep with me."

The 44-year-old Bronfman is the son of Samuel Bronfman of Montreal, founder of Seagrams. The young Bronfman is the president of Seagrams. He said he found what he said of Lady Caroline strange since he and she "were lovers" for four months before their marriage last Dec. 18.

Both have been previously married and both have children. Bronfman, prominent in Jewish philanthropic circles and a director of both the New York Philharmonic Society and Washington's John F. Kennedy Centre for the Performing Arts, said he gave Lady Caroline $1 million, $115,000 in jewels, and the title deeds to a baronial mansion in Yorktown Heights, Westchester.

Bronfman told the judge that Lady Caroline suggested "her family advised her that because I was a man of means, $1 million was a paltry sum and I should settle $5 million on her."

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — The "pure luxury" of Frank Sinatra's Palm Springs estate is up for sale at a price of $1,750,000, a real estate firm announced Tuesday.

The famed singer is moving to a higher altitude in the San Jacinto mountains at Idyllwild west of Palm Springs.

Film-Maker Pioneer Shows Two

The pioneer of home movies in the United States will present two films Friday at the Victoria Art Gallery.

Lenny Lipton, a prolific, independent film-maker and author of "Independent Film-Making," will show Children of the Golden West and Hilltop Nursery, starting at 8 p.m.

Children of the Golden West represents the beginning of a new stage in the technical-esthetic development of cinema. It is the first feature film made with a Super 8 synch-sound camera.

Hilltop Nursery is a 30-minute study of efforts to utilize the Bobath techniques to treat brain damaged children.

On Saturday and Sunday at the gallery Mollie Green Mitchell will conduct a silk-screen workshop for beginners. Times are 9:30 a.m. to noon and 1 p.m. to 3:30 p.m.

Advance registration is required and cut-off date is Thursday at 5 p.m.

Ms. Mitchell is a Canadian artist whose work has been exhibited widely in Canada and the United States. She uses watercolor, pastel, acrylic, wood and lino blocks as well as silk-screen.

Admission charge to the workshop is $12 for the general public, $10 for gallery members, students and OAPs. Exhibitions at the gallery include selections from the permanent collection and the show, Fired Sculpture, the work of 16 Canadian artists.

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (UPI) — Jackie Gleason this week was granted a divorce but fellow entertainer Mickey Rooney will have to wait a while longer for his.

Broward County circuit judge Robert Tyson agreed to terminate the marriage of Gleason, 58, to Beverly McKittick, 41, after four years. The divorce was granted at a closed-door hearing. Officials said.

Five floors above Gleason Stephen Boomer conducted a hearing on the divorce petition of Mrs. Carolyn Rooney, seventh wife of the onetime child movie star. She asked custody of the two children, alimony, child support and division of their joint property.

WILMINGTON, Ohio — Oscar Boyer, 67, has cycled more than 60,000 miles in the United States and Mexico. He has worn out eight tricycles during an 11-year odyssey and when his ninth was stolen last year in Gastonia, N.C., the town's residents gave him a new one.

WASHINGTON — The U.S. government can't find former vice-president Spiro T. Agnew's letter of resignation. It knows Agnew resigned Oct. 10, 1973 — after pleading no contest to tax evasion — because it has copies of the letter he sent Secretary of State Henry Kissinger as prescribed by law.

But it can't find the original.

State department spokesman John F. King said it could have been misplaced or even stolen.

PERTH, Australia — A pilot for the Royal Australian Air Force refused to fly Japanese Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka out of Perth airport Tuesday until a package brought aboard the plane was opened.

A Japanese Embassy official brought the brown box aboard a few minutes after Tanaka and other officials boarded the plane.

A security officer took the box to the terminal building and returned with a bundle of magazines about the Australian northwest which an iron ore company had sent the Japanese consul in West Perth.

Tanaka is on a trade and goodwill mission to Australia.

VACAVILLE, Calif. — Convicted murderer Charles Manson's mental condition has greatly improved after his seven-month stay at the Vacaville medical facility, officials said.

Hubie Passes Lee

WASHINGTON (AP) — Johnny Miller won $353,020 playing on the U.S. Professional Golfers' Association tour this year to break the all-time money record held by Jack Nicklaus.

Nicklaus's high of $308,362 was recorded in 1973. He wound up with $258,778 this year, second best to Miller.

Hubert Green, combining with Mac McLendon to win the national team championship last weekend, picked up $25,000 to move ahead of Lee Trevino into third place on the season's money list with $211,709. Trevino won $203,422.

J. C. Snead is fifth at $164,486, followed by Dave Stockton, $135,105; Hale Irwin, $152,529; Jerry Heard, $145,788; Brian Allen, $137,950; and Tom Watson, $135,474.

Today's deal was submitted by a reader with the observation: "This hand contains no feat of brilliance or technical proficiency. But I think it would be of interest to your readers as a 'fun hand.' The deal came up in a tournament.

The bidding:

North-East South-West

1♥ Pass 1♠ Pass

2♥ Pass 3♠ Pass

3♥ Pass 3NT Pass

Pass Pass

Opening lead: Six of ♦.

As can be observed, the normal North-South contract on this deal would be four hearts. With the catching of East's queen of trumps, plus a successful club finesse, 12 tricks would be made, with North's only loser being a diamond.

But, as we all know, peculiar things happen at the bridge table. Today's deal is a case in point. It all began when South bid three clubs, instead of making the proper call of three hearts. And South had another chance to put his partner into a heart contract when North then bid three diamonds. However, South elected to take the short route to game by bidding three notrump.

What happened to South at this contract will be observed in a moment. I'm reasonably sure that the memory of this deal will remain with South for the rest of his bridge-playing life.

Against South's three notrump contract west, feeling that his partner had no spades (based on South's initial response of one spade) elected to open the six of diamonds. A low diamond was played from dummy, East put up the nine, and South captured the trick with his queen. If one were to look at the North-South hands, it would be difficult to visualize that South had just made the only trick he was going to make.

But that's exactly what happened.

To trick two South led the nine of hearts, and when West followed with the three, South finessed against West's hoped-for queen. Upon winning the trick, East shifted to the queen of spades, and then continued with his remaining spade. On one of the seven spade leads, a diamond was discarded from dummy.

After winning the seventh spade trick, West led his remaining diamond, trapping dummy's king, and enabling East to make four diamond tricks. Down eight, for a loss of 800 points!

FUN WITH FIGURES

By J. A. H. HUNTER

We have 249 for the game today. One 2, two 4s, and one 9. Using all four digits each time, but no other digits at all, you form expressions for the consecutive numbers from one up.

Any arithmetical signs may be used, but no summation or factorial symbols. Don't forget decimals, regular and regular, also powers and roots, two extra digits. For example, 29 plus 1 plus 1 is a solution for 37.

The limit without a break in continuity seems to be 106. I shall be glad to check solutions, and will send hints to help in future games if requested.

Yesterday's answer: THREE was 107.

CUP SOCCER PROFITS TOP $20 MILLION

ROME (AP) — Soccer's World Cup tournament in West Germany this year has produced a record profit of more than $20 million, the International Soccer Federation (FIFA) announced Tuesday.

Total expenses for the Cup, including taxes, costs for travelling and stay of the 16 teams, referees and officials was $7 million, said FIFA spokesman Rene Courte.

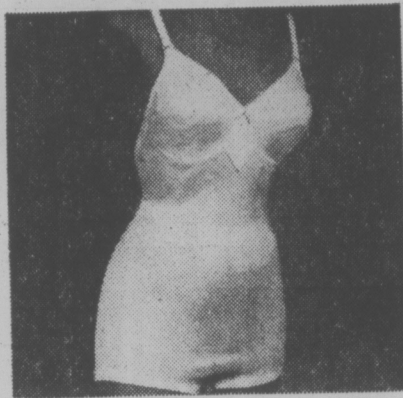

The profit from the 1970 World Cup in Mexico barely exceeded $6 million, Courte said.

Stop-Gap Teachers Bill Set

TEACHERS OUT IN ALBERNI

PORT ALBERNI — Half the 425 teachers in Alberni School District booked off sick today, closing all the district's 26 schools.

The book-offs are to protest failure of the Alberni school board to begin local bargaining of the teachers' 1975 contract.

"We want to bargain in Port Alberni and nowhere else," said Alberni Teachers' Association president Winston Joseph today.

Region To Share Bus Costs

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

The Capital Regional District will have to begin paying its share of transit costs in 1975, Municipal Affairs Minister James Lorimer said Tuesday.

Lorimer will propose the local municipalities pay one-half the operating losses for bus services in the area, up to an amount equivalent to what two mills could raise.

B.C. will continue to pay the full capital costs of Greater Victoria's transit service and will pay the other half of the operating losses.

Victoria and Vancouver have been "spoiled brats" until now, he said in an interview, and it is time the urban centres began paying some share of their transit costs.

A similar financing arrangement will be applied to the Greater Vancouver Regional District, he said, but Vancouver will have to pay its share of the operating deficit in 1974.

Services in Victoria have not been expanded greatly in the last year, said Lorimer, so the Capital Region will not have to finance any deficits this year.

Lorimer talked of the financing arrangement as a "broccoli" and said he will meet with local government representatives shortly to discuss the plan.

He said he would be willing to listen to "suggestions" from the local authorities but when asked if he might change his mind Lorimer said "if they can put up a case where they think they should pay more, I'll be willing to listen."

The minister said he did not know how much money the region would actually have to pay but he said he doubted it would amount to more than one-half a mill in the first year.

"But the most important part of my suggestion," he said, "was to make the levy not be an over-all levy on taxpayers but be an amount raised by the areas that benefit from the transit services."

Under that system, the levy would not simply be applied across the board but could be

Interim legislation will be introduced in the house Thursday to deal with the current impasse in teacher-trustee bargaining in B.C.

Education Minister Eileen Dailly said this morning she could not divulge the contents of the legislation before it is presented to the legislature but stressed that the bill is designed to deal only with the current situation.

"My intention is to provide legislation to prevent any further crisis," she said, adding that her responsibility is "to see school children in this province receive their education."

Both teacher and trustee representatives met with the minister Tuesday evening and reaffirmed that neither side intends to budge on the question of regional or province-wide bargaining.

The B.C. Teachers' Federation said trustees are breaking the law if they refuse to negotiate on an individual basis with the 68 school districts which have not yet settled their 1975 contracts.

The B.C. School Trustees' Association initially sought to have one negotiator to represent all school boards but have now agreed to a compromise to negotiate on a regional basis with 17 government-appointed conciliators.

Teachers say they will not travel to Vancouver to negotiate with the regional conciliators and BCSTA president Eileen Madison said the trustees "have no intention of returning to local bargaining for one more year."

The impasse comes just 11 days before the Nov. 15 deadline for all outstanding teachers' contract disputes to be settled.

Contracts not settled by that date must go to compulsory arbitration. But the same problem will likely arise because the trustees say they do not intend to appoint individual arbitrators for each district and the teachers say they will not accept a single arbiter.

Meanwhile some teachers in Coquitlam have been striking to protest regional bargaining and Jim MacFarlan, president of the BCTF, said teachers in 10 to 12 other districts are considering some action, including strikes or working-to-rule, to protest the situation.

MacFarlan said bargaining has been done on an individual basis for 25 years and charged the trustees are engaging in a "deliberate attempt to destroy collective bargaining."

The strike in Coquitlam was called off today.

U.S. VOTE UPSET FOR FORD

Democratic Tidal Wave

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — Democrats, riding a political tidal wave spawned by scandal and fed by inflation and unemployment, swept the 1974 elections Tuesday by tightening their grip on Congress and building new power in the nation's statehouses.

Despite President Ford's warnings against a "legislative dictatorship," the voters gave Democrats House and Senate victories that approached a numerical "veto-proof" congress.

President Ford had three color television sets tuned in on the returns, then conceded: "I have accepted the verdict. Those who lose often come back to win another day."

Democrats, with suddenly rosy visions of the presidential race in 1976, rushed out public statements full of promise.

"We will win the White House in 1976" if Ford doesn't change his economic programs, said Texas Senator Lloyd Bentsen, who wants the Democratic nomination himself. Senator Henry Jackson of Washington, another hopeful, thought he would make his decision by year's end.

Jackson added: "People are just fed up... they're fed up with high prices and obscene profits."

And a NBC survey of voters as they left the polls found that 20 per cent of those who had voted Republican in 1972 went to the Democrats this time and that disapproval of Ford's pardon of Nixon was a major factor in their decisions.

The winners in Tuesday's election will not take over until January. Until then, the current office-holders carry on.

For members of Congress, that means a so-called "lame-duck" session starting later this month. The list of unfinished business includes a major trade-reform bill which Canada and other trading partners of the United States want to see approved.

The senators elected Tuesday get a six-year term, the representatives two years and the governors either two or four years depending on state laws.

Most of the best-known names in the Senate survived the voting.

But Senate seats in five states — Florida, Vermont, North Dakota, Colorado and Kentucky — switched to the Democrats from the Republicans.

The House of Representatives was headed towards a two-thirds Democratic membership with more than 40 Republicans ousted.

And Democrats replaced Republican governors in New York, California, Massachusetts, Connecticut and a clutch of smaller states.

Parts of the electoral picture remained to be filled in early today. Some House seats were still undecided and recounts were in the offing for the Ohio governorship and a couple of see-saw Senate places.

But the Democrats had at least 62 seats in the 100-member Senate, 263 in the 435-member House and 35 of the 50 state governorships — with more of each apparently waiting to fall into their grasp with the completion of vote counting.

Among the Democratic winners were several who will have a chance to play a king-maker's role in future. They include Representative Hugh Carey, who won New York's governorship; Jerry Brown, youthful governor-elect in California.

U.S. Food Funding 'Paltry' Claims Canadian Delegation

ROME (EP) —

Canada's delegation to the World Food Conference was not happy with the five-point program for dealing with world hunger presented Tuesday by U.S. Secretary of State, Henry Kissinger.

In his address to the opening session of the conference, Kissinger proposed that three new international agencies be set up and a number of programs be instituted. But these involve little new funding from the United States.

"paltry" was how one Canadian official described the amounts involved — and he called upon the oil-exporting nations to bear most of the new financial burden of feeding the world and of paying for the agricultural development of the poorer nations.

The head of the Canadian delegation, Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan, expressed some concern with Kissinger's proposals for three new international agencies. "We shouldn't tie ourselves down with loads and loads of bureaucracy," he said.

Whelan also expressed fears that the 60 million extra tons of grain proposed by Kissinger to be held in an international reserve might be too much. "We won't use a grain bank against our producers," he said.

Canadian officials were even more upset than Whelan at the 40-million ton increase. Unless steps were taken to ensure that the reserve was isolated from commercial markets, it could hang over grain markets, pushing prices down, one official warned.

"The very existence of those stocks, no matter who holds them, could reduce prices," he said.

To date, there has not been a satisfactory way of separating the depressing effect of world emergency reserves from commercial markets, the official said.

To make a reserve system work, there would have to be stiff penalties for nations that violated the safety provisions of the stockholding plan and if these were too stiff, grain exporting countries would not be likely to join the plan, he added.

An official of the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) of the United Nations explained, however, that the concern over the food reserve plan depends on how the stock levels are calculated.

DIET COLUMN IN TIMES

Food is fuel and taste, and most of us seldom go beyond considering it in those contexts.

But, to Dr. Jean Mayer, professor of nutrition at Harvard University, the affect food has on various bodily functions is at least as important as the amount of salt it needs to make it palatable.

The Times will carry a column called Food for Thought by Mayer each Wednesday, adding another dimension to the food and nutrition pages and dealing with such subjects as dieting, vitamin supplements, the pros and cons of vegetarianism and the caloric impact of sugar.

You'll find Mayer's column today on Page 27.

B.C. Rail Still Idle

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Railway operations were shut down for the second consecutive day today as about 150 of the corporation's 550 shopcraft tradesmen continued a walkout which began last Friday.

A B.C. rail spokesman said all 120 workers in the northern regional centre of Prince George are continuing to picket along the 400 miles of track between Williams Lake and Fort Nelson.

Freight movement on the government-owned line is restricted to switching between the Canadian National Railway yards and Vancouver Wharves in North Vancouver.

Although 78 shopcraft members are on the job in North Vancouver, and another 220 in Squamish, the spokesman said since there are no trains out of the north there is little to do at the southern terminals. Passenger service to central interior cities also has been discontinued.

Union leader Norm Farley, meanwhile, said there is no split in the union ranks.

"The whole problem has been brought on by management's refusal to recognize that Prince George even exists," he said Tuesday night.

"The men in the north feel totally left out," he said.

'FAIR' OFFER SUITS FERRY FINDERS

Two Nanaimo men who salvaged a 77-foot B.C. ferry in July when they found it floating adrift said today they have been made an offer they won't refuse.

The provincial government's second offer of a salvage fee, "more than the previous offer of $1,800," according to B.C. Ferries spokesman Sheila Dohy, will be accepted by the two.

John Martin and Donald Bohun found the boat adrift near a marine gas station close to its Nanaimo-Gabriola Island route.

He called the new offer "fair" and said it is "pretty close to 10 per cent of the boat's value."

Tory Rakes Lalonde's Free Ride

By IAIN HUNTER
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Prime Minister Trudeau and other government and company sources contradicted one another in trying to explain a flight to Israel by a cabinet minister aboard a Seagrams jet.

Trudeau said in the House that Health Minister Marc Lalonde flew to Israel, where he is the guest of the Israeli government, aboard the distillery's jet because this was proposed by that country's ambassador.

However, aides to the minister stated that Lalonde and Mrs. Lalonde were asked to make the flight by a member of the Bronfman family which owns more than 27 per cent interest in Distillers Corp. Seagrams Ltd. A public relations firm representing the company confirmed this version.

Sinclair Stevens (PC-York-Simcoe) who raised the issue in the House, suggested later that the Trudeau administration is setting a precedent under which cabinet ministers and their families take trips at the expense of private interests.

He noted that Mrs. Trudeau is in Japan at present as the guest of a Hong Kong shipping magnate.

The prime minister, who has said he sees nothing wrong with his wife accepting the invitation to Japan, refused to talk to reporters trying to ask him about the Lalonde trip when he came out of the House Tuesday.

But he angered Stevens in the chamber when he gave what the MP called "flip-pant" answers to his questions.

Trudeau stated that he didn't know why Lalonde decided to go to Israel on the distillery's jet, but added that "perhaps it was an attempt to save fuel."

In the Commons Stevens recalled that Lalonde has attacked brewery advertising in Canada, and asked Trudeau if there is not a conflict of interest in the minister accepting "this hand-out" from the biggest distillery in the country and the biggest competitor of the breweries which he had attacked. "I would be prepared to say there is no conflict of interest," the prime minister said. "Perhaps, if it will satisfy the honorable member, I will have the minister invited to Egypt and he can fly in a Molson's plane on the next trip," he added.

VANCOUVER SEEKS OWN RENT BUREAU

VANCOUVER (CP) — City council wants power to establish its own rental accommodation bureau with the same powers as the provincial rentalsman.

Council voted Tuesday to ask the provincial government for a change in the Landlord and Tenant Act that would allow the city to establish such a bureau to deal with landlord-tenant disputes.

Alderman Harry Rankin said a city rental authority with the same powers as the rentalsman could do a better job than the provincial office. He described the rentalsman's office as being in "chaotic condition."

The rental accommodation grievance board had requested but was disbanded because the opening of the rentalsman's office had reduced calls to the city agency but urged that its staff be retained to provide an advisory service.

Crosswalk, No Lights for House

Highways Minister Graham Lea doesn't intend to install any traffic lights in the legislature but he said Tuesday he'd consider providing a "crosswalk" for party-switching Hugh Curtis of Saanich.

The minister got off the jibe while responding to opposition quips about installation of traffic lights to control members' speeches. The system is designed to tell Speaker Gordon Dowding when allotted debating time is up.

The opposition had asked if the lights were installed with permission of the highways minister.

Curtis, who has just switched from the Conservative to the Social Credit party, was not in the house for the exchange.

Limits on debate, meanwhile, were imposed for the first time in the B.C. legislature Tuesday against an MLA who seldom speaks in the house.

Frank Fichter (S.C. Bon-dary-Similkameen) was speaking during second reading of the new marketing act when Speaker Gordon Dowding interrupted to say the 10-minute limit on debate had expired.

The legislature changed its rules last spring to limit all debate in the house but opposition members strenuously objected.

When Dowding faced his first move to impose the new rules he was met with jeers from the opposition benches, and one Soerod shouted "democracy has died."

The Speaker said in an interview later he has rigged up a system of lights in the speaker's box to alert him of the time limits.

Clerks of the housetime the debate and flash on a green light when the MLA has two minutes left and flash a red light when his time is up.

Dowding said he wants to set up a light on the clerk's desk so all MLAs will be warned when to begin winding down their speech.

But not all the party caucuses have agreed to the light system yet, he said.

Different time limits have been set for each kind of debate in the house but during second reading of a bill the mover is entitled to 60 minutes, party leaders can have unlimited time and other speakers can have 40 minutes.

During the evening sitting Tuesday, the question came up again when the Soerods tried to convince the Speaker that Ed Smith (S.C. — North Peace river) should be allowed full 40 minutes of debate in the evening, after beginning his speech in the afternoon.

Dowding ruled, however, that Smith was only entitled to the 21 minutes remaining in the speech he had begun 19 minutes before the house adjourned for the dinner break.

Reports Unstudied

Attorney-General Alex Macdonald said Tuesday he had not studied two reports commissioned by Rentalsman Barrie Clark before introducing amendments to the Landlord Tenant Act Monday.

Reports by Dr. John Cragg and Clarkson, Gordon and Co., were commissioned to recommend ways and means of determining an allowable rent increase, now set by legislation at 10.6 per cent.

"Final reports weren't available," said Macdonald, replying to a question in the house from Liberal Leader David Anderson.

Macdonald said legislation was drafted after preliminary reports and "countless face to face meetings."

He added University of B.C. professor Cragg's final report was "just received and to what extent it varies from previous ones I don't know. But I think all the information would be available to members so they will be able to make a judicious decision on the legislation."

Asked by MLA Allan Williams (L. — West Vancouver-Howe Sound) whether the Clarkson report would also be made available, Macdonald said:

"I will consider that — that again is something that just arrived."

Rift Seen In French Labor War

PARIS (Reuters) — French President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing's government vowed today it would not permit a wave of strikes in nationalized industries to overturn its anti-inflation program.

The first break in the series of strikes, which have badly affected the French economy, came today with a return to work by coal miners in Lorraine.

But a three-week-old mail strike continued, rail services were disrupted again and gas and electricity workers planned more power cuts.

The government, which has suggested the strikes are politically motivated and orchestrated by the Communists, embarked on an all-out effort to win public support for its effort to hold down pay increases.

President Giscard d'Estaing told a Cabinet meeting: "France is engaged in a decisive struggle against inflation, on which depends the maintenance of employment. Priority must be given to this struggle which concerns the fate and future of every Frenchman. This will be continued."

Giscard d'Estaing's statement was seen as a display of strength and a sign that the government would not easily give in to the demands of workers in nationalized industries.

The mail strike has had the most serious economic impact, with almost no mail deliveries for the last three weeks. Firms that do business by mail virtually have had to halt operations.

Prime Minister Jacques Chirac, who had openly suggested the strikes are political, said today they threatened to paralyze the essential services and life of the country.

Coal Talks Break Down; Strike Sure

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — The on-again, off-again negotiations between the nation's coal companies and the miners' union — sputtered — to another stop Tuesday, and hope of averting a strike next Monday night disappeared. The main question was how long it will last.

United Mine Workers' President Arnold Miller walked out of a negotiating session in the early hours of Tuesday saying of the companies, "With what they've handed us tonight, they've declared a strike in the coal fields."

Later in the day a spokesman for the union said there will probably be further face-to-face bargaining this week, and that "we don't consider the talks broken off."

Miller, on leaving the negotiating session, said there is not enough time left to get a new contract ratified by the union membership before the present pact expires next Monday night, and that in any case "the membership would not ratify what they gave us."

The industry told a different story. "We gave them an offer that, in my opinion has not been exceeded in any negotiations in major industry in total scope," said Guy Farmer, negotiator for the Bituminous Coal Operators Association.

The UMW's 120,000 working members produce about 70 per cent of the nation's coal.

Nixon 'Weak'

LONG BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Former-president Richard Nixon's doctor describes Nixon's condition as "terribly physically weak," after disclosing that Nixon's right lung has collapsed.

Hospital spokesman Norman Nager said Dr. John Longren's report — Tuesday meant there was "an inactive area of living tissue" involving a small part of the organ, but the condition is more commonly defined as a lung collapse.

FORGED LETTER AUTHOR KNOWN

VANCOUVER (CP) — RCMP chief superintendent Mark Marcus said Tuesday police officers know the author of a forged letter to Senator Ed Lawson.

He said Senator Lawson received a letter Monday in which the author took credit for another letter, allegedly written by Annie Van Campen, one of Premier Dave Barrett's assistants.

The first letter criticized the Teamsters' union. Senator Lawson is president of the Teamsters' joint council for B.C. and international vice-president of the union.

"He has done this sort of thing before," said the superintendent, referring to the forger who lives in Vancouver. He said he did not know how the letterhead from the premier's office was obtained.

Chief Marcus said he did not think the premier would wish to lay charges.

Petersen Opts to Quit

WASHINGTON (WP) — Assistant attorney-general Henry Petersen, a key figure in the original Watergate investigation, is retiring at the end of this year, it was announced Tuesday.

At the Justice Department, Attorney General William French Smith said in a statement praising Petersen that "his decision to retire is completely his own."

Saxbe reportedly tried to persuade Petersen to stay on until mid-1975.

White House press secretary Ron Nessen also told reporters Petersen had not been asked to resign.

As head of the Criminal Division, Petersen was in charge of the original Watergate investigation until the Special Prosecution Force was set up in June 1973.

He was later criticized when White House tape transcripts revealed that Petersen had passed along Watergate grand jury reports to President Nixon in April 1973, a time when Nixon's top aides were the investigation's prime targets.

According to several close associates, Petersen, who received a pin for 30 years of federal service only last month, had wished to retire as early as 1972 or 1973, but did not wish to leave under a cloud.

Stop-Gap Teachers Bill Set

TEACHERS OUT IN ALBERNI

PORT ALBERNI — Half the 425 teachers in Alberni School District booked off sick today, closing all the district's 26 schools.

The book-offs are to protest failure of the Alberni school board to begin local bargaining of the teachers' 1975 contract.

"We want to bargain in Port Alberni and nowhere else," said Alberni Teachers' Association president Winston Joseph today.

Region To Share Bus Costs

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

The Capital Regional District will have to begin paying its share of transit costs in 1975, Municipal Affairs Minister James Lorimer said Tuesday.

Lorimer will propose the local municipalities pay one-half the operating losses for bus services in the area, up to an amount equivalent to what two mills could raise.

B.C. will continue to pay the full capital costs of Greater Victoria's transit service and will pay the other half of the operating losses.

Victoria and Vancouver have been "spoiled brats" until now, he said in an interview, and it is time the urban centres began paying some share of their transit costs.

A similar financing arrangement will be applied to the Greater Vancouver Regional District, he said, but Vancouver will have to pay its share of the operating deficit in 1974.

Services in Victoria have not been expanded greatly in the last year, said Lorimer, so the Capital Region will not likely have to finance any deficits this year.

Lorimer talked of the financing arrangement as a "proposal" and said he will meet with local government representatives shortly to discuss the plan.

He said he would be willing to listen to "suggestions" from the local authorities but when asked if he might change his mind Lorimer said "if they can put up a case where they think they should pay more, I'll be willing to listen."

The minister said he did not know how much money the region would actually have to pay but he said he doubted it would amount to more than one-half a mill in the first year.

"But the most important part of my suggestion," he said, "was to make the levy not be an overall levy on taxpayers but be an amount raised by the areas that benefit from the transit services."

Under that system, the levy would not simply be applied across the board but could be

VANCOUVER SEEKS OWN RENT BUREAU

VANCOUVER (CP) — City council wants power to establish its own rental accommodation bureau with the same powers as the provincial rentalman's office.

Council voted Tuesday to ask the provincial government for a change in the Landlord and Tenant Act that would allow the city to establish such a bureau to deal with landlord-tenant disputes.

Alderman Harry Franklin said a city rental authority with the same powers as the rentalman's office could do a better job than the provincial office. He described the rentalman's office as being in "chaotic condition."

The rental accommodation grievance board had requested it be disbanded because the opening of the rentalman's office had reduced calls to the city agency but urged that its staff be retained to provide an advisory service.

Interim legislation will be introduced in the house Thursday to deal with the current impasse in teacher-trustee bargaining in B.C.

Education Minister Eileen Daily said this morning she could not divulge the contents of the legislation before it is presented to the legislature but stressed that the bill is designed to deal only with the current situation.

"My intention is to provide legislation to prevent any further crisis," she said, adding that her responsibility is "to see school children in this province receive their education."

Both teacher and trustee representatives met with the minister Tuesday evening and reaffirmed that neither side intends to budge on the question of regional or province-wide bargaining.

The B.C. Teachers' Federation said trustees are breaking the law if they refuse to negotiate on an individual basis with the 68 school districts which have not yet settled their 1975 contracts.

The B.C. School Trustees' Association initially sought to have one negotiator to represent all school boards but have now agreed to a compromise to negotiate on a regional basis with 17 government-appointed conciliators.

Teachers say they will not travel to Vancouver to negotiate with the regional conciliators and BCSTA president Eileen Madson said the trustees "have no intention of returning to local bargaining for one more year."

The impasse comes just 11 days before the Nov. 15 deadline for all outstanding teachers' contract disputes to be settled.

Contracts not settled by that date must go to compulsory arbitration. But the same problem will likely arise because the trustees say they do not intend to appoint individual arbitrators for each district and the teachers say they will not accept a single arbitrator.

Meanwhile some teachers in Coquitlam have been striking to protest regional bargaining and Jim MacFarlan, president of the BCTF, said teachers in 10 to 12 other districts are considering some action, including strikes or work-to-rule, to protest the situation.

MacFarlan said bargaining has been done on an individual basis for 25 years and he said the trustees are engaging in a "deliberate attempt to destroy collective bargaining."

The strike in Coquitlam was called off today.

U.S. Food Funding 'Paltry' Claims Canadian Delegation

ROME (CP) — Canada's delegation to the World Food Conference was not happy with the five-point program for dealing with world hunger presented Tuesday by U.S. Secretary of State, Henry Kissinger.

In his address to the opening session of the conference, Kissinger proposed that three new international agencies be set up and a number of programs be instituted. But these involve little new funding from the United States.

"Paltry" was how one Canadian official described the amounts involved and he called upon the oil-exporting nations to bear most of the new financial burden of feeding the world and of paying for the agricultural development of the poorer nations.

The head of the Canadian delegation, Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan, expressed some concern with Kissinger's proposals for three new international agencies. "We shouldn't tie ourselves down with loads and loads of bureaucracy," he said.

Whelan also expressed fears that the 60 million extra tons of grain proposed by Kissinger to be held in an international reserve might be too much. "We won't use a grain bank against our producers," he said.

Canadian officials were even more upset than Whelan at the 60-million ton increase. Unless steps were taken to ensure that the reserve was isolated from commercial markets, it could hang over grain markets, pushing prices down, one official warned.

"The very existence of those stocks, no matter who holds them, could reduce prices," he said.

To date, there has not been a satisfactory way of separating the depressing effect of world emergency reserves from commercial markets, the official said.

To make a reserve system work, there would have to be stiff penalties for nations that violated the safety provisions of the stockholding plan and if these were too stiff, grain-exporting countries would not be likely to join the plan, he added.

An official of the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) of the United Nations explained, however, that the concern over the food reserve plan depends on how the stock levels are calculated.

DIET COLUMN IN TIMES

Food is fuel and taste, and most of us seldom go beyond considering it in those contexts.

But, to Dr. Jean Mayer, professor of nutrition at Harvard University, the affect food has on various bodily functions is at least as important as the amount of salt it needs to make it palatable.

The Times will carry a column called Food for Thought by Mayer each Wednesday, adding another dimension to the food and nutrition pages and dealing with such subjects as dieting, vitamin supplements, the pros and cons of vegetarianism and the caloric impact of sugar.

You'll find Mayer's column today on Page 27.

B.C. Rail Still Idle

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Railway operations were shut down for the second consecutive day today as about 150 of the corporation's 550 shopcraft tradesmen continued a walkout which began last Friday.

A B.C. Rail spokesman said all 120 workers in the northern regional centre of Prince George are continuing to picket along the 400 miles of track between Williams Lake and Fort Nelson.

Freight movement on the government-owned line is restricted to switching between the Canadian National Railway yards and Vancouver Wharves in North Vancouver.

Although 78 shopcraft members are on the job in North Vancouver, and another 320 in Squamish, the spokesman said since there are no trains out of the north there is little to do at the southern terminals. Passenger service to central interior cities also has been discontinued.

Union leader Norm Farley, meanwhile, said there is no split in the union ranks.

The whole problem has been brought on by management's refusal to recognize that Prince George even exists," he said Tuesday night.

"The men in the north feel totally left out," he said.

'FAIR' OFFER SUITS FERRY FINDERS

Two Nanaimo men who salvaged a 77-foot B.C. ferry in July when they found it floating adrift said today they have been made an offer they won't refuse.

The provincial government's second offer of a salvage fee, "more than the previous offer of $1,800," according to B.C. Ferries spokesman Sheila Dohy, will be accepted by the two.

John Martin and Donald Bohun found the boat adrift near a marine gas station close to its Nanaimo-Gabriola Island route.

He called the new offer "fair" and said it is "pretty close to 10 per cent of the boat's value."

OTTAWA — Prime Minister Trudeau and other government and company sources contradicted one another in trying to explain a flight to Israel by a cabinet minister aboard a Seagrams jet.

Trudeau said in the House that Health Minister Marc Lalonde flew to Israel, where he is the guest of the Israeli government, aboard the distillery's jet because "this was proposed by that country's ambassador."

However, aides to the minister stated that Lalonde and Mrs. Lalonde were asked to make the flight by a member of the Bronfman family which owns more than 32 per cent interest in Distillers Corp. - Seagrams Ltd. A public relations firm representing the company confirmed this version.

Sinclair Stevens (PC, York-Simcoe) who raised the issue in the House, suggested later that the Trudeau administration is setting a precedent under which cabinet ministers and their families take trips at the expense of private interests.

He noted that Mrs. Trudeau is in Japan at present as the guest of a Hong Kong shipping magnate.

The prime minister, who has said he sees nothing wrong with his wife accepting the invitation to Japan, refused to talk to reporters trying to ask him about the Lalonde trip when he came out of the House Tuesday.

But he angered Stevens in the chamber when he gave what the MP called "flip-pant" answers to his questions.

Trudeau stated that he didn't know why Lalonde decided to go to Israel on the distillery's jet, but added that "perhaps it was an attempt to save fuel."

In the Commons Stevens recalled that Lalonde has attacked brewery advertising in Canada, and asked Trudeau if there is not a conflict of interest in the minister accepting "this hand-out" from the biggest distillery in the country and the biggest competitor of the breweries which he had attacked. "I would be prepared to say there is no conflict of interest," the prime minister said.

"Perhaps, if it will satisfy the honorable member, I will have the minister invited to Egypt and he can fly in a Molson's plane on the next trip," he added.

WASHINGTON — Democrats, riding a political tidal wave spawned by scandal and fed by inflation and unemployment, swept the 1974 elections Tuesday by tightening their grip on Congress and building new power in the nation's statehouses.

Despite President Ford's warnings against a "legislative dictatorship," the voters gave Democrats House and Senate victories that approached a numerical "veto-proof" congress.

President Ford had three color television sets tuned in on the returns, then conceded: "I have accepted the verdict: Those who lose often come back to win another day."

Democrats, with suddenly rosy visions of the presidential race in 1976, rushed out public statements full of promise.

"We will win the White House in 1976" if Ford doesn't change his economic programs, said Texas Senator Lloyd Bentsen, who wants the Democratic nomination himself. Senator Henry Jackson of Washington, another hopeful, thought he would make his decision by year's end.

Jackson added: "People are just fed up... they're fed up with high prices and obscene profits."

And a NBC survey of voters as they left the polls found that 20 per cent of those who had voted Republican in 1972 went to the Democrats this time and that disapproval of Ford's pardon of Nixon was a major factor in their decisions.

The winners in Tuesday's election will not take over until January. Until then, the current office-holders carry on.

For members of Congress, that means a so-called "lame-duck" session starting later this month. The list of unfinished business includes a major trade-reform bill which Canada and other trading partners of the United States want to see approved.

The senators elected Tuesday get a six-year term, the representatives two years and the governors either two or four years depending on state laws.

Most of the best-known names in the Senate survived the voting.

But Senate seats in five states — Florida, Vermont, North Dakota, Colorado and Kentucky — switched to the Democrats from the Republicans.

The House of Representatives was headed towards a two-thirds Democratic membership, with more than 40 Republicans ousted.

And Democrats replaced Republican governors in New York, California, Massachusetts, Connecticut and a clutch of smaller states. ample compensation for their loss of South Carolina to a Republican and Maine to a Democratic renegade.

Parts of the electoral picture remained to be filled in early today. Some House seats were still undecided and recounts were in the offing for the Ohio governorship and a couple of see-saw Senate places.

But the Democrats had at least 62 seats in the 100-member Senate, 263 in the 435-member House and 35 of the 50 state governorships, with more of each apparently waiting to fall into their grasp with the completion of vote counting.

Among the Democratic winners were several who will have a chance to play a king-maker's role in future. They include Representative Hugh Carey, who won New York's governorship; Jerry Brown, youthful governor-elect in California.

Tough Spill Curbs Urged

OTTAWA (CP) — Growing pollution dangers in Canadian coastal waters demand tough new measures and vastly improved marine traffic control systems from the federal government, says oil spill expert P. D. McTaggart-Cowan, executive director of the Science Council of Canada.

Dr. McTaggart-Cowan, who headed the Arrow oil spill cleanup group, told reporters Tuesday that as international efforts have so far not produced agreement on control of territorial waters, Canada should act on its own.

The government should declare authority over waters which can be covered by marine surveillance systems and insist that foreign ships obey Canadian marine pollution laws, he said. Vessels breaking pollution laws should be impounded rather than fined.

Dr. McTaggart-Cowan, who spoke earlier to a marine pollution conference, also said that marine navigational control systems should be improved so that marine operations are at least as safe as air services.

Referring to the transport department's touted new system at Chedabucto Bay in Nova Scotia, he said, "I couldn't put it on a fishing boat."

Dr. McTaggart-Cowan headed the federal group cleaning up the oil spill in Chedabucto Bay after the tanker Arrow foundered. The $4 million operation took four months to complete.

But Dr. McTaggart-Cowan suggested Canada should act now, announcing how far it will extend its authority. Then the marine traffic control systems should be improved greatly to keep a sharper eye on shipping.
